Finn Victory Reported

Copyright by New York Times

Copenhagen, Feb. 5.—Despite official denials in Helsinki, reports that the Finns have annihilated a Russian division in the Kitela region northeast of Lake Ladoga were received with credence in informed quarters here tonight.

According to these reports, the division was destroyed along the highway leading from Kaesnaesekae through Uomas to Kitela, between the Russian border and Lake Ladoga. This division, as well as two or three others, has been known for nearly a week to be cut off and virtually at the mercy of encircling Finnish forces.

The disastrous campaign began, it is understood, with an attempt to outflank the Mannerheim Line by sending one division northward along the Ladoga shore and another westward from the border, along the railroad and highway that connect Suojaervi with Kitela.

Both Divisions Checked

Both these divisions were checked. The first is reported about halfway on its intended route to Kitela, its communications blocked by the heavy fire of the Mantsi Island fortress in Lake Ladoga. The second division, it was reported, is being held in check by the Finns from strongly fortified positions at the Kollaan River, some distance to the north.

According to tonight's reports, failure of two attempts to relieve the Kitela forces was followed by an attempted Russian break along the road from Kaesnaesekae, and the division engaged in this desperate thrust is the one destroyed.

The Finnish denial is looked upon here as similar to the one that preceded official announcement of the destruction of the Russian 44th and 163d divisions in the battle of Suomussalmi in December. The reason is believed to be that, since only one of the three or four divisions engaged has been disposed of, the Finns wish to complete their victory before making the announcement.

Developments Awaited

Helsinki (Tuesday), Feb. 6 (AP).—Finnish soldiers watched the Karelian Isthmus and the Lake Ladoga regions today for the next major development in the war with Russia, but reports abroad that the Russian Eighteenth Division had been destroyed were denied by a headquarters representative.

The spokesman said the report of the annihilation of the division apparently arose from the fact that a decisive development north of Lake Ladoga, in the Kitela area, had been awaited for days since the Soviet offensive there had been stalled

Mrs. Louise Redmon Geesling, 13-year-old bride

'Nobody Can Take Him Away From Me,' She Says, After 4 Months of Matrimony; Husband, 23, Has a Job on WPA Project

A child bride, 13 years old, who would "rather be married than in school," yesterday defied anyone to try to break up her marriage.

While her 23-year-old husband was away at work, Mrs. Louise Redmon Geesling (still wearing socks) sat in the kitchen of her parents' home at 4902 Canal road northwest and talked about her four months of married life. Her conversation had the refrain: "Nobody can take me away from him."

Representatives of the Women's Bureau of the Metropolitan Police and the Board of Public Welfare yesterday afternoon had a conference "to weigh the matter and to seek the most advisable ways of helping the young people." No conclusion was reached.

"My parents are satisfied with the marriage because I've got a good husband," Louise insisted. Joseph Geesling, her husband, is "an electrician's helper on WPA," Louise said.

"Married life certainly has made me different. Why, a year ago, when I was only 12, if I got a penny, I would run to the store to buy candy. And now I want to save every penny I can, so we can get ahead. Maybe we'll have a house of our own some day. I'd

If This Be Treason, You Wives Just Must Make the Most of It

Wives "are not really as important as they think they are," commented Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt yesterday in her copyrighted column, "My Day."

She ventured the opinion in a discussion of her feelings about missing a meeting with a House subcommittee investigating her informal charges of "shocking" conditions at the Blue Plains Home for Aged and Infirm, and the Children's Receiving Home.

Spending the week-end at Hyde Park with the President, Mrs. Roosevelt wrote:

"Frankly, I feel a trifle guilty about it, for on Thursday, just before I left Washington, I received a letter inviting me to testify on Saturday evening before the Congressional committee which is investigating District institutions.

"I thought that I should return to Washington and give up coming here, but the President felt the committee could do quite well without my testimony. Of course, I think one of the really useful tasks performed by husbands is to remind their wives occasionally that they are not really as important as they think they are. However, I am so interested in this Congressional investigation that I hope the committee will give me another opportunity to talk to them about some of the problems of the institutions I have seen these past two weeks."

The House committee and Mrs. Roosevelt have arranged to confer at 5:30 p. m. tomorrow in the White House.

Model for Chest Drive Poster Dies in D St. Rooming House

James B. Sloan, who had a famous face, but never made a fortune with it, died yesterday in a rooming house at 305 D street northwest.

Mr. Sloan was known to Washington as the man in the 1937 Community Chest campaign poster, the man whose face made such a perfect portrait of hardship and suffering that Chest officials decided to use it in their appeals.

For the period of the drive for funds, Mr. Sloan's phtograph was the most widely published in the city. His eyes made appeal from posters in every quarter of the Capital. Newspapers many times carried pictures of the sunken cheeks, the deepset eyes, the heavy lines of care.

The story of Mr. Sloan's discovery was recalled yesterday by Bert Sarazen who was commissioned to plan display material for the 1937 campaign. The campaign appeal, Sarazen remembered, was written around the Biblical reference, "You are your brother's keeper," and it was decided that what was needed to make it effective was a face, "anguished, pleading, broken."

The city's bread lines were searched for such a face. Mr. Sloan

An Oriental mystery with something of the pattern of a Fu Manchu thriller yesterday caused the deaths of two Chinese and left three others seriously ill. All were members of the same family.

The dead:

Lee Ling, 68, also known as Charlie Lee, proprietor of a restaurant at 1827 Seventh street northwest, member of the On Leong Tong, the host.

Lee Fay, 34, of Silver Spring, Md.

Both died at about 2 p. m. yesterday. Lee Ling at his home at the restaurant, Lee Fay in Silver Spring. The fish breakfast, prepared by Lee Ling, was eaten at 1:30 a. m.

Rendered violently ill were Lee Bee, 58, coproprietor of the Seventh street restaurant; Lee Ying, 38, of Silver Spring, and Bailey Lee, 41, of Silver Spring. James Lee, 36, of Buffalo, N. Y., who arrived for a visit Sunday, ate none of the breakfast.

Canadian Ship Sunk By U-Boat

Crew of 100 to 200 Reported Rescued; 54 Die as Mineboat, Bombed, Goes Down

By James B. Reston.
Copyright by New York Times

London, Tuesday, Feb. 6.—Sinking of the 9,874-ton Canadian Pacific liner Beaverburn by a German submarine off the southwest coast was confirmed by the admiralty early today, a few hours after the minesweeper Sphinx, crippled Saturday by German aerial bombs, sank as she was being towed to port.

It is stated authoritatively that all of the Beaverburn's crew, except one, were picked up by rescue vessels. Admiralty officials understand that the Beaverburn was not carrying passengers.

Little was known of the torpedoing of the Beaverburn, first Canadian loss of the relentless war at sea, and it was believed that few details would be available until the rescue vessels reached port.

Carried 100 to 200

Owners of the fast freighter, which plied between Liverpool and St. John, N. B., said she carried a crew of between 100 and 200.

The admiralty announced that 5 officers and 49 seamen aboard the new minesweeper Sphinx, 875 tons, were lost. It was the first British warship loss due to enemy air action, the twenty-fourth naval loss of the war to date.

It was confirmed at the same time that two other ships had been mined and that two more were missing.

The Dutch motor tanker Ceronia, 8,086 tons, struck a mine Monday morning off the south coast but proceeded to Rotterdam, and the London steamer Portelet, 1,064 tons, sank after hitting a mine last weekend in the North Sea.

The missing ships were the Swedish Andalusia, 1,357 tons, and the Norwegian Segovia of 1,387 tons, both of which vanished somewhere between the Gibraltar and their home ports.

Wave Capsizes Minesweeper

The Sphinx was crippled last Saturday when around 15 planes appeared all along the east coast and three of the raiders were shot down. The Sphinx, finished last year, was armed with two 4-inch antiaircraft guns and five smaller guns.

The minesweeper's engines and steering apparatus were put out of action in the attack. Tugs came out and managed to get the Sphinx in tow, but heavy seas rolled up, and just as the cable broke, a huge wave struck the Sphinx broadside and turned her over. Two officers and 44 seamen were picked up by tugs, but others, including Commander J. R. N. Taylor, were trapped below decks.

The accident evidently happened in Scottish waters.

There is some question whether the Sphinx was protecting a convoy at the time of the bombing attack. This is not denied, though it is doubted in official quarters. From evidence that she was far to the north at the time, it is more likely she was traveling alone.

Two members of the crew of the Portelet were killed when the steamer was mined. The other nine members of the crew were landed at an East Coast port by a Finnish ship.

The missing ships Andalusia and Segovia carried crews of 21 and 22 when last reported.

The German claim that Nazi planes sank 36,000 tons of Allied shipping in the last ten days of January was denied here. However, there has been a noticeable tendency to tighten up the censorship on naval information here.

Stores Cut Milk Price Here to 13c

Distributors Doubt There'll Be a Slash In Delivered Cost To Capital Buyers

By James D. Secrest
Post Staff Writer

The first break in the retail milk market in Washington came yesterday with announcement of a cut from 14 to 13 cents a quart in the store price as Senator Tydings (Democrat), of Maryland, told the Maryland-Virginia Milk Producers Association that their Congressmen "will block the passage" of the Schulte bill.

Local distributors said there is no prospect either of a decrease or an increase in the standard 14-cent price for milk delivered at the door, although they hinted that reductions may be forthcoming on sales in 2-quart or gallon containers.

Relief Plan Is Pushed

Other developments in the metropolitan dairy market yesterday were:

The Agriculture Department promised cooperation in a plan to extend the 5-cent relief milk to families in Montgomery and Prince Georges counties.

The Consumers' Milk Committee of the District issued a statement assailing local dairies for raising the price of cream following promulgation of the milk marketing order on February 1.

Officials disclosed that the Lucerne Butter & Cream Co., an associate of the Sanitary Grocery Co., will complete by early summer a dairy now under construction.

The Chestnut Farms-Chevy Chase Dairy, which furnishes the major milk supplies for local chain stores, was the first to announce the 13-cent milk. It serves the Sanitary and District Grocery Stores, chains as well as other retail outlets.

Officials explained that the dairy was making a cut of half a cent in its wholesale price, from 12 to 11½ cents, and that the stores were expected to take a similar loss. They said there was no compulsion on the stores to sell milk at 13 cents.

Price War Is Indicated

Thompson's Dairy and Sylvan Seal, of Baltimore, the latter supplying the Atlantic & Pacific and American stores, followed the lead of Chestnut Farms-Chevy Chase, and other distributors were expected to do likewise.

While there were some indications that a price war in the wholesale market was beginning, dairymen denied any knowledge of it. One official explained that the store differential is "something that Wash-

Japan Rejects Offer of Britain To Free 9 Nazis

Tokyo (Tuesday), Feb. 6 (U.P.).—Japan has rejected a British offer to release nine of the 21 German passengers seized from the Japanese liner Asama on January 21, Foreign Minister Arita told the House of Peers today.

"This government is not satisfied with the British offer and negotiations are continuing in an effort to obtain release of the entire group of Germans," Arita said.

The Germans, former seamen on Standard Oil tankers, were removed from the Asama Maru by a British cruiser which had fired two shots across her bow off Japan's big naval base at Yokosuka, near Yokohama. The incident infuriated the Japanese public, and newspapers described it as a British naval invasion of Japan's "front yard."

Va. House Votes To Tax 60,000 Here

Approximately 60,000 residents of Arlington and Fairfax counties and the City of Alexandria will be affected if the Virginia State Senate concurs in the bill to tax Federal employes which yesterday overwhelmingly passed the State's House.

In Alexandria, based on "the best estimate available," live about 14,000 persons who are employed in Washington, and some 90 per cent, or 12,000, of these are Government workers.

A "very rough guess," said Carol F. Winchester, secretary of the Arlington Chamber of Commerce, places the number of residents of that county working in Washington at 85 per cent of the total population. Those employed by the Government, he estimated at about 43,000 persons.

Roosevelt Bars 3d-Term Talk, Says He Won't Be Smoked Out

Weary Now of Wise-Cracks He Once Enjoyed; Insists on Picking Own Time for Talking; Defends New Deal's Accomplishments

By International News Service

Hyde Park, N. Y., Feb. 5.—President Roosevelt served notice once and for all this afternoon that he could not be smoked out on the third term issue and then launched into a 45-minute defense of New Deal accomplishments in the last seven years.

At a prolonged Hyde Park press conference, Mr. Roosevelt said he was a bit weary of the continued efforts to find out whether or not he will be a candidate again this year. Any announcement on the subject will come at a time of his own choosing, not anyone else's, he said.

The President held his press conference while the Democratic National Committee was meeting in Washington amid much individual discussion of the possibility of a third term attempt.

It was a glowing picture of business and agricultural recovery that Mr. Roosevelt portrayed, presumably in answer to various candidates for the Republican Presidential nomination who have been attacking the New Deal from stem to stern in recent weeks.

He reported that national income, consisting of wages and salaries, factory pay rolls, cash farm income, dividend payments to stockholders, exports and nonagricultural employment, had increased by imposing figures from 1932 when he took hold, up to 1939.

His statistics, asserted the Chief Executive, were pretty formidable for anyone to face who was trying to prove the country had gone bust.

Jackson Asked To Investigate Pelley Letters

Committee Brands Them Forgeries; Hook Not Ready to Admit It

By John B. Oakes
Post Staff Writer

Asserting that the documents were "forgeries," the Dies Committee yesterday asked Attorney General Jackson to take "appropriate action" on letters purportedly linking Chairman Dies with the Silver Shirt leader, William Dudley Pelley.

Representative Hook (Democrat), of Michigan, who originally inserted the letters in the Congressional Record and on Saturday asked Jackson to investigate them, persisted in his refusal to admit they were forgeries until there has been a fuller inquiry.

Suggests Plot

In an official statement released yesterday, the Dies Committee said it has "indisputable evidence and testimony" showing that the letters are forged. The committee has directed its secretary, the statement said, "to submit all of its testimony with exhibits in connection with all phases of this matter" to the Attorney General.

The committee action followed a succession of charges and countercharges at a morning session of a sub-committee of the House Rules Committee, which has before it a resolution to expunge Representative Hook's remarks from the Record.

In explaining how he came into possession of the letters, Hook asserted that David D. Mayne, who has allegedly confessed forging the documents, was last December "in the service" of the Dies Committee and had "conferred" with Rhea Whitley, at that time committee counsel.

Pearson Named

Mayne, from whom the documents were obtained, was hired by the committee to find Pelley, Hook declared, adding that "if there was a plot, it was between a man employed by the Dies Committee and the Pelley organization."

Suggesting that he might be the victim of a plan "to entrap the opponents of the Dies Committee," Hook quoted "a member of Congress" as saying that he knew the documents were not genuine even

Mrs. Roosevelt Denies Youths Follow Reds

Introduces Leaders To Congressmen At the White House

Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt yesterday denied that the American Youth Congress was "Communist-dominated" and introduced its leaders to a group of youth-conscious Congressmen at an informal White House gathering last night.

Replying at her press conference to the statement of John D. M. Hamilton, chairman of the Republican National Committee, that he wouldn't attend the Youth Congress meetings until it "purged itself of its communistic elements," Mrs. Roosevelt said:

"Until Mr. Hamilton can purge the whole United States for allowing a Communist to exist in the United States, I don't see how any youth organization can do what the whole country cannot do."

The First Lady said the Young Communist League was one of the member groups of the A. Y. C., but that she didn't think its representative "was a predominating influ-

Charles S. Deneen, Former Senator From Illinois, Dies

Chicago, Feb. 5 (AP).—Charles S. Deneen, veteran Republican leader who served two terms as Governor of Illinois and one as United States Senator, died today at his home.

His death, at 76, was attributed to heart disease.

Deneen was elected Governor twice, in 1904 and 1908, and was sent to the Senate in 1924. In the turbulent primary of 1928, he assumed the leadership in a fight against the potent party faction captained by Gov. Len Small, Mayor William Hale ("Big Bill") Thompson and State Attorney Robert E. Crowe of Cook County (Chicago).

Shortly after Deneen returned from Washington, his home was bombed—an act he charged to "organized and protected criminal classes in their efforts to retain political control of the city and county." Two of his followers, a colored politician and a ward leader, were slain. Deneen spoke at their funerals.

8 Organizations Plan Parties For Benefit of Blood Bank Fund

Eight Washington organizations completed arrangements yesterday for bridge parties for the benefit of the Children's Hospital blood bank fund.

Among the latest to join The Post-WJSV campaign was the Washington Bridge League, local unit of the sponsoring American Contract Bridge League, which has arranged for about 40 tables of duplicate and rubber bridge tomorrow night in the Shoreham Hotel, where space has been donated by the management.

Thomas Hamlin is president of the league, Paul E. Golden, secretary; Dr. C. C. McDonnell, vice president; D. C. Elliott, treasurer, and Roy Astleford, game director.

The game, it was announced, will have available all necessary equipment and arrangements have been made for handling single players and odd pairs. The first duplicate section will start at 7:30 p. m., the last at 8:30 p. m.

The Washington Gas Light Co. Post of the Legion announced that the entire sales floor as well as adjoining space in the company's headquarters at 411 Tenth street

$200,000 Houston Bid Rejected; G. O. P. Hope to Hold Last Session Upset

By Robert C. Albright,

The Democratic National Committee yesterday upset all forecasts and turned down a larger money offer to name Chicago the scene of its next national convention.

The Midwestern site of the first Roosevelt nomination was selected by the slender majority of one vote after recapitulation of an earlier count placing Philadelphia in the lead.

No convention date was set. Selection of the time was placed solely in the hands of the chairman, James A. Farley. He is expected to pick a date at least a week following the Republican national convention.

This maneuver completely frustrated Republican hopes of convening last. The Republican National Committee will meet here February 16 to choose its own national convention time and place. A committee rule requires it to give at least four-month-notice of convention plans.

3d Term Issue Smothered

The third term issue never once bubbled to the surface of Democratic committee business, although committeemen speculated freely during recesses. Chairman Farley took precautions against open airing of the question.

In a speech urging a "united democracy" and warning against the dangers of a "shattered Democratic front," Farley carefully pointed out that officially the committee can "take no part in the preliminary struggles" but must wait for convention action.

A noisy afternoon of spirited bidding for the convention won the award for Chicago after insistent pleading by Mayor Edward J. Kelly and a last minute swing of votes from Philadelphia.

Kelly promised only to "match" the Philadelphia bid, $130,000 cash plus $20,000 in convention facilities. Unlike Philadelphia, he offered no certified check. "They will take my word for that," he told reporters.

Another check for $200,000 by Federal Loan Administrator Jesse Jones to take the convention to Houston failed to tempt the committeemen. Neither did a San Francisco bid of $50,000, plus $35,000 in private subscriptions, plus another $150,000 depending on action of the California Senate.

Hamilton Irked

The decision ran counter to the traditional award of the convention to the highest bidder—and blasted predictions that Philadelphia would win, shared by Farley himself. In well-informed quarters it was said that choice of Chicago is highly satisfactory to the President, first nominated there in 1932.

The final ballot gave 48 votes to Chicago, 38 to Philadelphia, 7 to San Francisco and 2 to Houston. On motion of Mrs. Emma Guffey Miller, Pennsylvania National committeewoman who had battled for Philadelphia, the action was made unanimous. Philadelphia led but lacked a majority on the first count, but rapidly lost ground—after outdistanced San Francisco and Houston votes switched to Chicago.

From the start, the support of Mayor Frank Hague, of Jersey City, like Kelly a third-term advocate, was thrown to Chicago. Vice President Garner, who voted for Houston, had no other personal preference.

At the outset, Kelly promised to "match any reasonable amount,"

Over the Coffee

By Harlan Miller

Mr. Joe Doakes,
Middletown,
Iowa.
Dear Joe:

Here's one to tell your luncheon club pals and put 'em a jump ahead of Kiwanis and the Rotarians:

Jim Farley has suddenly developed an enormous popularity south of the Mason-Dixon line. Next to Scarlett O'Hara he's the toast of Dixie, as of today.

Harlan Miller

Some of the southland's bigshot politicians, like Max Gardner, are plugging Jim for President, or maybe for Vice President with Cordell Hull.

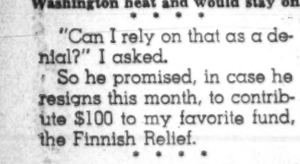
Max, you know, was the famous Governor of North Carolina who said something to the Governor of South Carolina.

* * * *

This is the important surprise twist of the month so far. If Dixie clasps Jim to its bosom then his religion won't be such an unfair handicap to him elsewhere. Chalk one up for Jim Farley.

* * * *

So you want the latest gossip and high-class lowdown on the Capital for the Thursday meeting. It would take a book to record the gossip you hear at just one cocktail party, and it might be out-of-date before you crashed the refreshments.



"—is this a system?"

You should have seen the movie stars at the White House. It was a riot. Tyrone Power was looking down his nose at Mickey Rooney because Mickey was hogging the camera as usual.

* * * *

Mickey Rooney got his picture taken sitting on the lap of Liz Whitney, the young matron with the magnetism. He tried to get her on his lap instead but the cameramen ruled against him.

The President celebrated his birthday playing hookey from his office all day. So would I, with a houseful of slightly awed and docile movie stars.

* * * *

He was even 20 minutes late to his press conference next day, but in that 20 minutes the scribes swapped more good stories out in the foyer than they got from him.

* * * *

Lots of people who saw Chick Autry walking through the snow in his white suit thought it was Mark Twain reincarnated . . . A crowd in front of the Willard mistook me for Mickey Rooney and demanded my autograph. I gave 'em my best Rooney leer, but nobody kissed me.

"—every shop on Main St."

Over their second drinks people began to pass around the rumor that Paul McNutt might resign.

He just grinned when I asked him and said he really enjoyed the Washington heat and would stay on.

* * * *

"Can I rely on that as a denial?" I asked.

So he promised, in case he resigns this month, to contribute $100 to my favorite fund, the Finnish Relief.

* * * *

You can tell your Democratic friends at the club that if they get spanked next election it will be largely because they tackled the job problem by the tail instead of by the horns.

* * * *

When you and I wanted a job when we were kids we walked up one side of Main St. and down the other and asked every store, getting more melancholy every minute till we found one.

If the Government wants 1,000,000 jobs it ought to ask the 300,000 bosses who employ five or more men each to hire one, two or five extra men for one year, the most they can.

* * * *

Mrs. Adolf Berle, wife of the Statesman, was inviting some guests to meet the Apostolic Delegate at dinner.

"How's your French?" she asked one.

"It's nil," said her friend.

"Then you'd better not come to my dinner," said Mrs. Berle, who is the most cerebral lady in the Capital.

It turned out that Jim Farley was at the dinner, and his French is worse than mine.

I still intend to return that copy of the Decameron you loaned me when we were high-school sophomores, as soon as that Congressman returns it. Yours,
HARLAN.

Morgenthau Hails Absence Of 'Gouging'

Praises Roosevelt For Keeping Prices On 'Even Keel'

By Felix Cotten.
Post Staff Writer

Secretary of the Treasury Morgenthau yesterday credited President Roosevelt with keeping domestic prices "on an even keel," despite trade dislocations and shifting demands in the wake of war.

He was impressed with the condition of domestic economy, he said, in recent visits to several aircraft engine and aircraft manufacturing plants. He felt this condition was "due largely to the leadership and initiative of President Roosevelt."

When the President lifted sugar quotas last fall, thus checking a rise in the sugar price, he declared, he "served notice on speculators that he would not permit distortion of domestic prices due to disturbances abroad."

Visits Air Factories

"While the rest of the world is all upset," Morgenthau remarked, "I go into factories and find them working at top speed and the cost of living more or less on an even keel."

On his latest tour, which ended yesterday, Morgenthau visited the aircraft engine plants of the Wright Aeronautical Corporation at Paterson, N. J., and Pratt and Whitney, Inc., at Hartford, Conn. He had previously visited the Glenn L. Martin Aircraft Co. plant near Baltimore and the Lycoming Engine Co. plant at Williamsport, Pa.

The industrial expansion in aircraft plants, he said, is probably "the largest that has taken place in the country in many years." Wright Aeronautical and Pratt and Whitney, he said, have expanded their plant 50 per cent. He visited a 950-foot factory building which Wright Aeronautical had built in 70 days.

Approves Wage Rates

Despite the fact that some of the factories have twice as many orders as they can take care of, he declared, he was satisfied those he visited were not "gouging anybody" on prices. Their wage payments are geared to the cost of living.

Morgenthau visited the plants in his capacity as liaison officer for the President in charge of coordinating Army and Navy, other domestic and Allied war purchases.

The condition at the plants, he felt, was compensation for the "grief and criticism" which followed his part in aiding a French aircraft purchasing mission a year ago. The expansion, he said, "has been entirely paid for by foreign orders."

Engine Making Speed

Morgenthau has been trying to find means to increase aircraft engine production. The potential capacity of these plants is not up to that of the aircraft plants.

He found that Wright Aeronautical and Pratt & Whitney obtained only 25 or 26 per cent of the tools they had ordered. At a recent conference, it is understood, the toolmakers promised to accelerate their supplies of tools. Results are already noticeable, it was said.

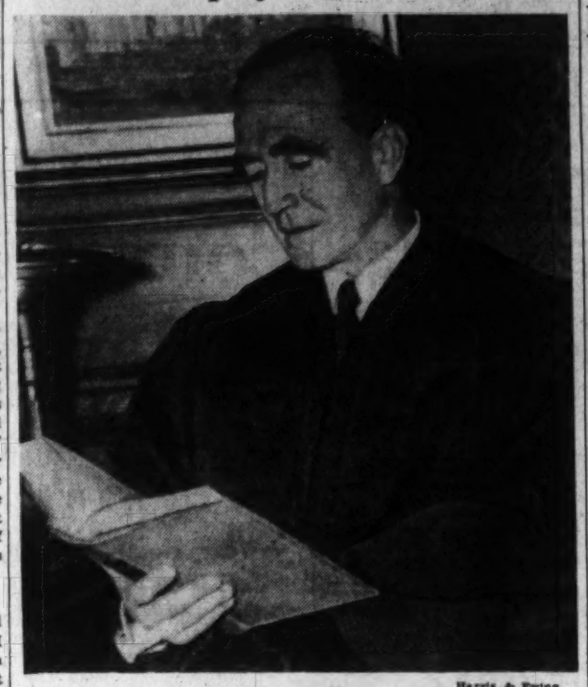
Sister Joachim Beams Pride: Frank Murphy Makes Good



Harris & Ewing

Former Attorney General Murphy posed in the robes of a Supreme Court Justice in his chambers yesterday after being sworn in as an associate justice

Nun, an Old Friend and Former Student Of New Justice, Knew He Would Go High In Official Life When He Began Career

To Sister M. Ann Joachim, O. P., the only nun ever admitted to practice before the United States Supreme Court, the elevation of Frank Murphy to be associate justice fulfilled a personal prophecy.

She knew Murphy would attain high station in the Nation's official life back in the days when she was one of his campaign managers and he was a candidate for his first political place as judge of the recorder's court in Detroit.

She said so last night at the Dominican House of Studies at Catholic University where she was stopping after hearing Murphy take the judicial oath at the Supreme Court yesterday.

As a matter of fact, she said she would not have been surprised if Mr. Murphy had become President.

"You could tell by looking at Frank Murphy that he was a great man," she said.

Sister Joachim was taught law by Murphy at the Detroit College. She was admitted to the Michigan bar in 1923, the youngest woman lawyer in the United States. She was for a time a member of the Detroit law firm of Mayer, Ruby and Joachim. She entered the order in 1928 and holds degrees from St. Joseph's College in Adrian, Mich., the University of Detroit, Loyola University in Chicago, and the University of Fribourg in Switzerland. She was admitted to practice before the Supreme Court in 1936.

She now is head of the social science department of Siena Heights College at Adrian. She tries law cases in which the order is interested and writes papers on hospital law for legal publications.

Murphy Takes Seat as Member Of High Court

By the Associated Press

Frank Murphy, of Michigan, 46-year-old bachelor, took his seat on the Supreme Court yesterday, giving it a majority of Roosevelt-appointed justices.

As the newest justice, the former Attorney General took the chair at the extreme left of the bench while Justice William O. Douglas moved over to the right flank. Murphy was appointed to the vacancy created by the death of Pierce Butler and became President Roosevelt's fifth appointee to the nine-man tribunal.

Sun-tanned from a Florida vacation, Murphy marched in with the other justices, attired in the traditional black robe, and took in the court room the oath to administer justice impartially. The oath, which usually is given in an anteroom, was administered by Charles Elmore Cropley, the clerk.

Smilingly, Murphy shook hands with Justice Frankfurter, who has the adjoining seat, and took his chair.

The session produced only one decision—a unanimous ruling, delivered by Justice Reed, that private users of the mails who suffer loss cannot sue to collect on a postmaster's surety bond without consent of the Government.

The Government was granted a Supreme Court review of a decision setting aside a determination by the Labor Department of the minimum wages that seven steel companies must pay their employes in order to sell their product to the United States.

NLRB Counsel Seeks Added Time for Case

An angry dispute over the request of Charles Fahy, NLRB counsel, that he be given more time to present the Labor Board's case, brought to a noisy conclusion yesterday's session of the Smith Committee.

When Fahy said just before adjournment yesterday that the five days alloted to the Labor Board had not been sufficient, Edmund M. Toland, counsel for the Smith Committee, jumped up to protest that Fahy's request showed "lack of appreciation," and was not made "in good faith."

Pointing out that he had not interrupted any of the board's witnesses while they were on the stand, Toland shouted that "I have documents to show that Madden did a little blacklisting himself."

J. Warren Madden, chairman of the NLRB, had just explained to the committee that a recent board decision involving the Waumbec Mills of Manchester, N. H., was aimed against the "unquestioned evil of the blacklist." In this decision, the board ordered back pay for two men who allegedly were refused employment on grounds of prior union activities.

Toland did not elucidate his reference to Madden's "blacklisting," but he said to the committee: "I ask you publicly not to give the Labor Board any more time, but let me call witnesses to the stand to confront them with documents. I would like the committee to tell me now that I'm going to be permitted to cross-examine Madden and others."

Chairman Smith of the committee said hearings would be resumed at 10 a. m. today, but did not reveal who would be on the stand.

Weekly Basis Is Yardstick For Pay, Hours

Counsel Announces System to Be Followed In Administering Law

The Labor Department wage and hour division announced yesterday that it would use, for enforcement purposes, a weekly basis in determining whether employers had complied with the wage-hour act, instead of an hourly yardstick.

Under this arrangement the division will consider that an employer has complied with the law if he pays a minimum wage of $12.60 for 42 hours of work during the week instead of 30 cents an hour for every hour worked up to the 42-hour weekly maximum.

In industries for which special wage orders setting higher minimum rates have been issued, the minimum weekly wage will be correspondingly higher, the division pointed out. For example, the minimum for the millinery industry, which has an hourly minimum of 40 cents, would be $16.80 for a 42-hour week.

George A. McNulty, division general counsel, explained in a letter that the weekly basis will permit employers to average compensation over a week. It will apply where employes are paid on a piecework basis. These employes, it is pointed out, may receive substantially in excess of 30 cents an hour for actual employment. Nevertheless, they may be idle a large part of the week and still have to remain at the shop for 42 hours.

In such cases, $12.60 will be their minimum compensation in industries for which no special wage orders have been issued.

A. F. L. Pledges Finish Fight in Trust Cases

By Paul Tobenkin.
Copyright by New York Tribune, Inc.

Miami, Fla., Feb. 5.—The executive council of the American Federation of Labor today pledged itself to fight to a finish against the recent series of indictments of labor union officials on antitrust charges. It held that such prosecutions not only threatened the destruction of the labor movement, but paved the way for a Fascist or Communist dictatorship.

The council, holding its mid-winter session here, accused the Department of Justice of having embarked on a "deliberate, nation-wide drive to place the organized labor movement under the thumb of the Federal Government." Within the past few months 12 indictments have been obtained against A. F. L. unions involving 35 organizations and a large number of their officers and members.

William Green, president of the A. F. L., said he had not conferred with President Roosevelt on the indictments, but indicated that he might do so soon. The federation considers the indictments one of the most serious threats ever made against the labor movement.

Plan Court Appeal

The council statement declared that the federation would carry to the Supreme Court these cases to prove that the Clayton Antitrust Act specifically exempted labor unions. If the court rules against the federation, the statement said, the A. F. L. will "institute a relentless campaign to have Congress reinvest the law with its original purpose and intention in language that even the wiliest lawyer could not innocently or wilfully misinterpret."

It added:

"It is noteworthy that all of the indictments thus far returned have been against American Federation of Labor unions. No C. I. O. union has been touched, disturbed or indicted. During the entire period of sit-down strikes, stay-in strikes quickies and even the seizure of cities by irresponsible C. I. O. unions under Communist control, the Department of Justice never lifted a finger to intervene.

Parran Pledges Help in Probe Of Aged Home

Aide Will Be Named To Work With House In Making Inquiry

Surgeon General Thomas Parran promised the aid of the United States Public Health Service yesterday to the House District Committee in an investigation of the Home for the Aged and Insane at Blue Plains.

Replying to a request for aid from Chairman D'Alesandro of the subcommittee on public health, Dr. Parran said that a member of the staff of S. L. Christian, chief of the division on hospitals, will be assigned to the sub-committee when the inquiry begins.

The third "surprise" visit to Blue Plains was made Sunday by Representative Vreeland (Republican), of New Jersey, he disclosed yesterday, as the District Commissioners prepared to make a personal tour of the institution this afternoon.

More Funds Urged

Vreeland, a member of the public health subcommittee directed to investigate the institution, said he believed that all of the major ills could be cured by larger appropriations.

More buildings are needed and present quarters need repairs, he said. The home is overcrowded but apparently is well managed, he added.

Chairman D'Alesandro revealed that the meeting between the subcommittee and Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt will be at 5:30 p. m. tomorrow at the White House.

Mrs. Roosevelt has invited the committee members, Welfare Director Robert E. Bondy, and the Director of the Budget Harold D. Smith, and the Commissioners to discuss the needs at Blue Plains and the Children's Receiving Home.

Letters Bury D'Alesandro

D'Alesandro said he will not make plans for hearings until after he had heard Mrs. Roosevelt's suggestions.

D'Alesandro, buried with an avalanche of letters from various persons who wish to testify when hearings begin, was forced to call for stenographic aid yesterday from the House District Committee.

The District Commissioners will visit the Home for the Aged and Infirm today. Commissioner Melvin C. Hazen explained that the District heads want a "first hand" picture of conditions at Blue Plains before talking with Mrs. Roosevelt.

$100,000 Waits Franklin Bank Depositors

Checks for a total of $100,000 are awaiting 17,500 depositors in the former Franklin National Bank.

Samuel M. Thrift, executive secretary of the Franklin Liquidating Trust, announced yesterday that depositors could secure their checks by calling at room 22 of the building formerly occupied by the Franklin Bank, at 945 Pennsylvania avenue northwest.

Depositors must produce "participating certificates" to receive checks.

The $100,000 will be the fourth dividend paid on the participating certificates by the three trustees, William F. Kelly, Lindsey P. Rawley and Henry J. Sterzer.

A 10 per cent dividend, it will raise payments to 80 per cent of the value of the certificates, or $800,000.

However, depositors received a payment of $1,500,000 in April, 1934, through the Bank of Washington. The sum was 65 per cent of the Franklin Bank's deposits at its closing in February, 1933. Depositors received participating certificates for the $1,000,000 balance.

The dividend now available will raise payments on the bank's deposits to 93 per cent of the total funds held by the institution.

Thrift said 5,000 persons have failed to call for their dividend checks in the past. He emphasized the liquidating trust is anxious to turn the checks over to depositors.

Most of the checks are small, Thrift said.

Law Requires Census Answers, Compels Secrecy

It is compulsory to answer the questions of the census-taker, but the answers are kept confidential so that no other Government bureau or agency can obtain the information, according to William Lane Austin, director of the census. He spoke last night over WMAL in the National Radio Forum program.

"No person or bureau can get our files for any purpose—taxation, or criminal investigation, or anything else," declared Austin. "That is the law and it has been tested and up held in the courts."

"The same law which requires you to answer his questions," Austin continued, "requires the census-taker to keep your answers confidential. Should he violate his oath, he is subject to a $1,000 fine or two years in prison, or both."

Tres Gentils! Lily Pons' Hat Pleases Singer and Visitors

"Bon jour, belle madamoiselle," said reporters as Lily Pons stepped from the train yesterday at Union Station. But that was as far as they got—her hat stopped them. She's here to sing Tuesday night in Constitution Hall

The War Really Is Inconvenient at This Time, What With Ice and All at Fronts Advises Opera Star in Interview While in Capital

Lily Pons, godmother of a couple of French regiments at the front, arrived here yesterday at 5:30 p. m. in a hat, oui. The jaunty way she wore it stopped the reporters.

"Nice," said Miss Pons, who talked of it amid questions concerning her favorite bird and flower, explaining that it was a coach hat, 1860 model, draped in chenille dots. It was a gray hat that sat high on her head. "Nice?".

It certainly was. To the questioning that spread from hats to husbands, Miss Pons said that she and her conductor husband, Andre Kostelanetz, were getting along well and not mixing temperaments.

"For you must know that I have no temperament; I keep my emotions normal so I can give them all to my audiences . . . I am never away from the Metropolitan because of illnesses . . . how? Oh! I don't go around people with those colds, around those people smoking."

She said she had two brothers-in-law at the front, and "France," the "a" so broad it lingered . . . "They must soon be fighting; a very inconvenient time now for fighting, all the ice. But France will win." Her small hand struck her knee. Her face was a crescendo of patriotism.

"We have spirit!" she said. "Of course!"

She sings tonight at Constitution Hall. She leaves Wednesday afternoon for Florida, with her husband. He will join her Wednesday morning. She is at the Raleigh. She has no idea of retiring from her career, as reports occasionally have inferred. And she won't return to the movies until: "a different story is written. They all seem too much the same."

She said they were lacking imagination.

Rep. Ford Backs Bill for Deportation Of Harry Bridges or 'Any Undesirable Alien'

Representative Ford (Republican), of California, proposed legislation yesterday which he said would call for the deportation of Harry Bridges, C. I. O. West Coast maritime leader, as an undesirable alien.

REP. FORD

The measure would require deportation of any alien who sympathized with Communists, associated with them or uses their support "in the interference with the good order and happiness" of a community.

Secretary Perkins recently dismissed deportation proceedings against Bridges after Dean James M. Landis, of Harvard Law School, reported to her that he could find no evidence that Bridges was a Communist.

Supreme Court Justice Black is in the hospital, suffering from what was described by his office as a "slight cold." His secretary said Black went to the hospital for treatment "as a precaution."

A bad cold kept Attorney General Jackson at his home yesterday, but aides said they expected him back today or tomorrow.

Charges that Paul R. Leake, President Roosevelt's nominee for customs collector at San Francisco, evaded California tax laws were denied yesterday by his counsel, Attorney Huston, of Woodland, Calif.

Answering allegations made by Senator Downey (Democrat), of California, in opposing Leake's confirmation, Huston told a Senate Finance subcommittee that Leake felt himself justified in claiming certain tax exemptions on the grounds that service in the United States Naval Reserve entitled him to them.

He added that while California law limited exemptions to veterans having less than $5,000 personal property, Leake's debts were such when he claimed them that his actual net worth was below the statutory limit.

House Probe Ordered Into D. C. System of Liquor Licensing and Revocation

A thorough investigation of the granting and revocation of liquor licenses in Washington, which might lead to amendment of the alcoholic beverage control act, was promised last night as Chairman Randolph named a special subcommittee to conduct an inquiry ordered earlier in the day by the House District Committee.

Representative Eberharter (Democrat), of Pennsylvania, a Pittsburgh lawyer, was appointed chairman of the subcommittee after Representative Kennedy (Democrat), of Maryland, instigator of the investigation, declined to serve so that the group could not be charged with bias.

Other members of the subcommittee are Representatives Schulte, of Indiana, and Hunter, of Ohio, both Democrats, and Dirksen, of Illinois, and Shafer, of Michigan, both Republicans.

Hearing Called Today

Thomas E. Lodge, chairman of the Alcoholic Beverage Control Board, called a hearing in the Leo Rossiter case, which inspired the Congressional inquiry, for 1:30 o'clock this afternoon after a severe cross-examination on Capitol Hill.

Rossiter, who operates a restaurant at 4132 Georgia avenue, was denied a renewal of a Class C license as of February 1 when two members of the board deadlocked the vote and the third declined to participate.

Lodge voted against renewal of the license, and Mrs. Agnes K. Mason, vice chairman, voted for it. The late Isaac Gans, then a member, did not vote.

The ABC Board chairman was summoned before the House District Committee and questioned at length by Kennedy, Schulte, Dirksen and other members of the subcommittee.

Power to "Confiscate"

A new hearing in the case was ordered at the instigation of the committee because of the appointment of William Payne Meredith, former secretary, as a member of the board to succeed Gans. Corporation Counsel Seal ruled that the new member could not participate in the case unless a new hearing intervened.

Representative Dirksen told the committee that the Rossiter action raised a question of whether the investment of a license can be "rubbed out" at the whim of the ABC Board and asserted that the board has the power to "confiscate the property" of every liquor licensee in Washington by revocation or failure to renew a license.

Upon motion of Representative Nichols (Democrat), of Oklahoma, the committee instructed Seal to draft an amendment to the liquor law providing for appeals to the Commissioners from ABC Board decisions in all cases.

The Rossiter case, in one form or another, has had reverberations on Capitol Hill since 1934, when a Class D license was first refused and later issued.

Kennedy to Testify

Former Representative Palmisano (Democrat), of Maryland, took an active interest in the case while a member and as chairman of the House District Committee.

Kennedy said last night that he will appear before the sub-committee and testify in both the Rossiter case and that involving Ralph A. Lee, of Lee's, Inc., 2622 E street northwest, which recently was denied a Class C license.

Lee told Kennedy in a letter that he stood ready to prove that Lodge had "solicited" protests from the Interior Department in his case and had sought unsuccessfully to obtain a protest from the Procurement Division of the Treasury in another case.

The ABC board chairman, Lee said, first told him that his cafe menu didn't have enough hot vegetables" before the board rejected the application on January 9.

Park Board Objects

Previously, Lee said he had been advised by the board's secretary that no protests had been filed to his application up to the day of the hearing and that everything was in readiness for its granting. Subsequently, the National Capital Park and Planning Commission filed an objection.

Lodge admitted under questioning by committee members that Rossiter had been charged with no violations of law or regulations and that the physical conditions surrounding the restaurant had not altered since the Class C license was granted in January, 1939.

He cited testimony of public school and library officials, clergymen, and a petition signed by 1,802 residents of a five-block area opposing renewal of the license as reasons for his action.

Dr. Matthews, Crusader, Dies Of Pneumonia

Former Moderator Of Presbyterians Fought Gambling

By the Associated Press

Seattle, Feb.—The Rev. Dr. Mark Allison Matthews, 72, Presbyterian pastor and vice crusader, died of pneumonia today. He was pastor of the largest Presbyterian congregation in the Nation.

His illness became complicated by a stroke, and for the past few days he had been unconscious in an oxygen tent.

Elected moderator of the General Assembly in 1912, the highest honor in the Presbyterian Church, Dr. Matthews subsequently was a member of the General Council, the Church's governing body. He was chairman of the King County (Seattle) chapter of the American Red Cross and an official of the national organization.

For many years he was a dues-paying member of the Seattle Bar Association. He was a Knight Templar and a Scottish and York Rite Mason.

Besides his wife, he is survived by a son and a daughter.

Dr. Matthews was a constant foe of organized gambling, and assailed many city administrations. He often assailed communism and was outspoken in opposing extreme pacifists among clergymen. The latter he once branded "deadly enemies of good government, the home and the church." He was a chaplain lieutenant colonel in the Organized Reserve Corps.

In 1910 he won national recognition by exposing corruption in the police department which led to the conviction of Chief Charles Wappenstein. For about 30 years he was a member of the police force, but drew no pay.

northwest will be occupied with tables at a benefit party February 16. Use of the building is being donated by the company.

The event will be part of America's Card Party, sponsored nationally by the American Contract Bridge League. J. T. Onley is in charge of arrangements.

Rudolph Berger, chairman of the welfare committee of the Variety Club, notified The Post that proceeds of the club's carnival night March 30 in its clubrooms in the Willard Hotel would go to the fund.

600 Are Expected

Card games of all kinds will be played and 600 persons are expected to participate, Berger said. Berger announced the appointment of Mrs. Fred A. Rohr as chairman of the ladies' committee.

The club's participation in the campaign, it was pointed out, is in line with previously demonstrated interest in similar projects. The club sponsored the incubator station at Sibley Hospital, where 12 incubators were installed a year ago at a ceremony attended by Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt.

The club will be unable to hold a card party earlier than March 30, Berger said.

Mrs. William Meyer notified The Post that a party given last week by the Herndon Chapter of the Order of Eastern Star had netted $35 for the fund.

The George E. Killeen American Legion Post and Auxiliary has arranged for a party of 40 tables tonight in their clubrooms at 3204 M street northwest. Jerome B. McKee, party chairman, pointed out that 40 tables is the capacity of the clubrooms.

Jones Post Plans Three Parties

The U. S. S. Jacob Jones Post announced it is sponsoring three parties.

The post party will be held February 13 at the residence of Mrs. Estelle Ruby, 5425 Thirteenth place northwest. Members of the committee in charge are Mrs. Deborah Brennan, child welfare officer, chairman; Mrs. Edna P. Smith, post commander; Anne Frame, department vice commander; Mrs. Mary Tatspaugh, Miss Jane Breen, Miss Lillian Caldwell, Mrs. Belle Graves and Mrs. Nelia Eichorn.

Mrs. Florence Kennedy, assisted by Miss Annette Burton and Mrs. Louise Patterson, are arranging for a second party Saturday.

A third party to be held during the week of February 11 is being planned by Mrs. Ruth Marks and Miss Blanche Sinclair.

Letts Rules Cady's Jailing Unlawful After Seven Months of Nonsupport Term

NITA S. HINMAN RICHARD H. CADY JOSEPHINE CADY

Cady, victim of seven months' imprisonment at Occoquan, assures his attorney, Miss Hinman, of his appreciation for her efforts, as he rejoins his daughter outside District Court

Richard H. Cady, 50-year-old victim of seven months' imprisonment, won his freedom yesterday upon a writ of habeas corpus issued by Justice F. Dickinson Letts of the District Court.

Justice Letts ruled that Judge Fay Bentley of the Juvenile Court here had no right to jail Cady for alleged nonsupport of his daughter, Josephine, who lives in Maryland. Fifteen-year-old Josephine nodded approval of Justice Letts' decision.

In 1938 Judge Bentley ordered Cady to pay $20 a month for the girl's support. Last June 20 he was haled into the Juvenile Court because he was $50 behind in his payments, and sentenced to a year in Occoquan Workhouse.

Miss Nita S. Hinman, who represented Cady before Justice Letts, said Cady had no attorney when he was tried on the nonsupport charge and that the man was sent to jail for 48 hours for contempt of court because he tried to tell his side of the story in court.

Miss Hinman pointed out that since June 1, 1937, Josephine had lived with her aunt, Mrs. Edith Gray, Capitol Heights, Md. Therefore, said Miss Hinman, authority to see that her father supported her belonged exclusively to the Maryland courts and Judge Bentley had no jurisdiction over the case, so that both her support order and her jail sentence were void.

Michael Keane, assistant corporation counsel, argued that Judge Bentley had jurisdiction if Cady were in Washington, no matter where his daughter was.

Store Milk Price Reduced 1 Cent

ington should have had some time ago."

Consumer representatives at hearings on the milk marketing order said other cities have a differential of between 1 and 4 cents on store milk and demanded a reduction for the District.

The possibility of an additional cut in the store price of milk was seen with the disclosure that the Lucerne Butter & Cream Co.'s dairy at 2040 West Virginia avenue northeast will be ready for operation by May or June. The milk will be sold in paper containers.

While officials declined to predict the retail price, rumors were it may sell for 11 cents a quart. Yesterday's reduction to 13 cents was seen as preparatory to this competition.

Dairymen scoffed at the prediction of Representative Schulte (Democrat), of Indiana, that the retail price of milk on home deliveries is to be raised to 15 cents because of the milk marketing order.

Senator Tydings attacked the Schulte bill to open the Washington milkshed to Midwestern shippers and Virginia Milk Producers Association at the annual dinner of the Maryland-Virginia Milk Producers Association at the Willard Hotel.

After a critical analysis of the measure, now on the House calendar, he praised Representative Smith (Democrat), of Virginia, for blocking the legislation last session. Tydings said the Congressional delegation from Maryland and Virginia stood "with guns loaded" this year.

He cited Senators Glass and Byrd, of Virginia, and members in the House who would assist in fighting the legislation. He argued it would lower the quality of milk sold on the Washington market.

After recalling the opposition of many producers to the strict District health regulations 15 years ago, Tydings said the farmers have met the standards by expenditure of thousands of dollars for equipment.

The Schulte bill, he contended, would undermine this investment by permitting producers outside the Washington milkshed to ship milk and cream into the Capital without compliance with District health regulations.

While conceding that the admission of Midwestern milk might lower the retail price slightly, he warned consumers that the milk would be neither as healthy nor as nutritious as that now sold.

More than 1,000 producers gathered at the Willard for a midday dinner. Guests included members of Congress, officers of medical and dental groups, distributors and officials of the Federation of Women's Clubs.

The producers met also at the Silver Spring headquarters of the farm cooperative and elected 21 directors and three representatives after amending their by-laws to provide for election of only a third of the board every year henceforth. B. B. Derrick, secretary-treasurer, delivered his annual report.

The new directors are:

Maryland—E. C. Biser, Ronald E. Kling, M. H. Ramsburg, J. H. Ramsberg, and E. C. Speaks, of Frederick County; Grover E. Greer, of Harford County; W. C. Poole, W. L. King, J. B. Waters, and L. R. Sabine, Montgomery County; M. E. Remburg, director at large.

Virginia—A. Gordon Willis, Culpeper County; J. L. Bristow, E. L. Hopkins, Robert E. Brady, Fairfax County; A. R. Glaettlin and C. H. Bowlin, Fauquier County; H. L. Gregg and V. B. Harding, Loudoun County; Frank S. Walker, Orange County; Dr. E. H. Marsteller, Prince William County.

Representatives—J. W. Kinman, McHenry, Va.; I. D. Van Metre, Martinsburg, W. Va.; F. G. Schaefer, Easton, Md.

The conference on extending relief milk to suburban Maryland was held in the office of Linwood E. Lagerson, attorney for Holbrook's Dairy. Welfare officials from Montgomery and Prince Georges counties were present. It was estimated between 1,000 and 1,500 relief families will be eligible.

Bernard M. Wise, attorney for Chestnut Farms - Chevy Chase Dairy, agreed to confer with dairy officials today regarding the cost of making home deliveries, an arrangement that would be unique in relief milk distribution.

Mrs. Simon M. Newman, chairman of the District Consumers' Milk Committee, denounced the rise in the retail price of cream as a "distributors' steal" from consumers and farmers.

before Hook placed them in the Congressional Record.

Acting Chairman Starnes of the Dies Committee retorted that "there isn't an iota of truth in the implication that the committee attempted to entrap anybody."

"I resent the inference," Starnes heatedly exclaimed, "that a man of the character, integrity and background of Rhea Whitley would play with Mayne to entrap Frank Hook or anybody else."

"I resent any inference that Representative Voorhis, Casey and Thomas [members of a Dies subcommittee appointed to find Pelley] would play with Mayne to entrap anyone," Starnes declared.

He asserted that Drew Pearson, Washington newspaperman, was primarily responsible for seeing that the Voorhis subcommittee was put in touch with Mayne as the man who might find Pelley.

Pearson declared last night, however, that "I have not seen or talked to Mayne since 1933."

Starnes said that "I can't describe my feelings when I heard" of a dinner party last month at the home of Gardner Jackson, an opponent of the Dies Committee, which was attended by six members of Congress. The letters Hook subsequently put in the Record were discussed at this gathering.

Representative Fish, of New York, ranking Republican on the Rules Committee, declared that several years ago Gardner Jackson, then employed in the Agriculture Department, had contributed to a "rank and file committee of the Communist Party."

Hook replied that Jackson, whom he had known for years, had no connection with the Communists.

In his testimony, Hook demanded a fuller explanation for a statement Representative Keefe (Republican), of Wisconsin, made on the House floor.

Meanwhile, a committee spokesman said that Chairman Dies, who was expected in Washington yesterday, was undergoing treatment in Texas for sinus trouble. Dies may return to Washington next week, it was said.

No Death for the God-Fearing, Is Credo of Blind Man Over 100

Amos Rebert, sightless resident of the National Lutheran Home for the Aged, celebrating his ninety-ninth birthday yesterday with his step-daughter, Mrs. Bertha Krebs, of Baltimore

'I Shall Lift Up Mine Eyes Unto the Hills,' He Intones to Visitors at Lutheran Home Celebrating 99th Anniversary of Baptism

Amos Rebert, Pennsylvania farmer for most of his life, now blind and living at the National Lutheran Home for Aged, Eighteenth and Douglas streets northeast, yesterday celebrated the ninety-ninth anniversary of his christening.

He has no record of his birth and his personal attendant at the home, Sister Mabel, thinks he is more than a century old. He has been at the home since 1922.

Yesterday Rebert treated all the members of the home to a turkey dinner and conversed with his step-daughter, Mrs. Bertha Krebs, who came from Baltimore to see him. He just couldn't keep his hands off his birthday cake or his nose out of the flowers Radio Station WOL sent him.

When visitors arrived a smile brightened his face. "Why are so many coming?" he asked Sister Mabel. "I guess they know I'm just a poor orphan boy who never expected to be so happy."

He sat in a huge arm chair, sightless eyes turned to the window. His thick body was erect. His lips trembled occasionally as if he were on the verge of speech.

Having learned Braille after he was 90, Rebert reads the Bible a great deal. He can quote the First, Twenty-Third and Ninetieth Psalms and large portions of the Book of John. He also likes to sing—gospel hymns he learned in his youth in York County, Pa.

The inevitable question: "To what do you attribute your long life?"

But Rebert had no easy answer. Death cannot come, he said, to a God-fearing man.

Turks Satisfied To Let Balkans Imply Alliance

That Meaning Is Read Into Statement Issued After Belgrade Parley

By J. W. Kernick.

Copyright by New York Times

Istanbul, Turkey, Feb. 5.—From the Turkish standpoint the results of the meeting of the Balkan Entente Council are highly satisfactory. The conclusion to be drawn from the official statement issued at Belgrade is that the policy of each of the four Balkan states will continue to be guided by its geographical position.

Thus Rumania and Yugoslavia will try, as far as possible, to maintain normal relations with their northern neighbors, while Turkey will remain loyal to her commitments to Great Britain and France and Greece will continue a cautious course.

Reading between the lines of the statement leaves the distinct impression that the states have realized that any act of aggression against any one of them, no matter whence, would be dangerous for the others and that such an event would find them united for common defense.

Turks Are Satisfied

It is fully understood here that it was hardly possible to do more than imply this at Belgrade for the following reasons:

Three of the greatest military powers are at war in Europe; the diplomacy of five great powers is intense in the Balkans; in the last year two powers which have common frontiers with the Balkans, Russia and Italy, have reversed their attitude toward the Balkan Entente, one from friendliness to hostility and the other from hostility to friendliness.

In such circumstances it is considered to be little short of miraculous that the Entente not only continued to exist but also to reach decisions such as those taken at Belgrade.

Improvement of relations between Bulgaria and her neighbors, particularly Turkey, gives great satisfaction in this country and tribute for this is paid in Ankara to efficient, if discreet, British diplomacy.

By C. L. Suzberger, Jr.

Copyright by New York Times

Belgrade, Yugoslavia, Feb. 5.—King Boris of Bulgaria has invited Turkish Foreign Minister Saracoglu to meet him at Sofia tomorrow to thresh out some of the Balkan questions emphasized at the entente meeting.

Saracoglu, it is expected, will make a frank oral report to the Bulgarian ruler, but diplomatic sources assert the talk will be merely informative.

Importance of the rendezvous, however, is that the Entente members have given friendly notice they are ready to cooperate to a degree with the malcontent countries of this region, Bulgaria and Hungary, and all indications are that Sofia will be the first capital approached.

Meantime, reliable sources say Hungary is somewhat worried about its own position as a consequence of the Entente deliberations. There is disappointment in the unity underlined by pact members because this reacts against Hungarian aspirations for Rumania's Transylvania.

It is understood Hungary is requesting assurances that if she were involved with Rumania in a dispute over the Transylvanian question Turkey would remain neutral.

There is little question, however, of single-handed Hungarian aggression against Rumania and if there should be any outside help the question would have entirely different aspects.

Red Division Reported Lost

and Russian forces of about two divisions cut off from its supplies.

Some observers interpreted a heavy Russian attack at Summa, on the Karelian Isthmus, as an attempt to divert the Finns from the Ladoga region and relieve the two divisions.

Finns Bore Into Foes

Instead, the Finns have been boring into Russian positions north of the lake and yesterday's communique announced the taking of a new stronghold, the killing of 500 Russians and the capture of seven tanks and other war materials, in Sunday's fighting.

The Finnish populace hoped today for a repetition of yesterday's general snowfall which blotted out the countryside so successfully that air raids were restricted to a few scattered districts, chiefly along the southwestern coast.

One woman was killed and seven women and children were injured and seven houses were destroyed when seven bombers attacked the fishing village of Kaskinen on the Bothnian Gulf, it was reported.

The village was of no commercial or military importance, officials said.

Hospital Ship Is Bombed

Two were reported killed in the bombing of Kajaani in central Finland.

A Reuters (British) press dispatch from Helsinki said a Russian plane bombed and machine gunned a Finnish hospital ship yesterday. The ship was reported damaged, but the crew and a lone patient aboard escaped uninjured.

The communique yesterday said four field guns, 30 automobiles and much other war material fell into Finnish hands after the repulse of attacks on three Finnish positions, one of them on the shore of Lake Ladoga and two others on islands near the shore.

Other attacks were reported set back at Summa, on the Karelian Isthmus, at the Aitto River, north of Kitela, and at Lake Marka, on the Salla front.

Heavy artillery exchanges thundered last night along the Karelian Isthmus front, fitfully lighting a snowy battlefield strewn with Russian dead, slain in a fruitless Soviet offensive which appeared to have spent itself after five days of unrelenting attacks.

Line Remains Unbroken

Military sources said the Mannerheim Line remained unbroken by the repeated Soviet assaults—in which tanks, armored sledges and parachute troops were used and during which Finnish front line troops went without sleep and food.

Finnish counter-barrages, these sources said, thus far had blocked every attempt of the Russians to dig in close to the Finnish lines.

The Finns made no official mention of their own losses, but foreign observers said they unquestionably had paid a heavy price in dead and wounded.

The Finnish press bureau reported that Soviet bombers had attacked a Swedish ambulance unit transporting wounded soldiers to the rear. Casualties were said to be slight.

An official bulletin declared 145 civilians had been killed and 179 injured in Russian bombing raids on 141 localities during the past week. The bulletin said six hospitals had been bombed or machine-gunned and that the Russians appeared to have begun a systematic attack upon churches.

The Finns said the Russians, adopting a new practice, were inaugurating night raids on blacked-out cities in an attempt to break civilian morale.

Finns Are Prepared

Civil authorities in Helsinki said the Finns were prepared for a continuation of the night raids. Fires were still burning in Turku and other communities in southern Finland as the result of attacks Sunday night.

Reports from Viipuri at the head of the Gulf of Finland, which was bombed heavily all day Sunday, indicated the damage was more widespread than at first supposed.

The nightly communique said nine enemy planes were destroyed and four others were believed downed during yesterday's raids. Listed among the towns at which the Russian air force struck were Maentyluoto, Tammissari, Riihimaki and Haeheelinna.

In the war zone, Soviet bombers blasted Valamo in the Koivisto district, the communique said, and fires appeared to have broken out in the monastery there. A church and rectory also were reported destroyed by bombs at Ivalo, Lapland.

Foreign observers regarded as especially significant the failure of recent Soviet assaults to crack the Finnish defenses in the Summa sector near the western end of the Mannerheim Line.

The Russian offensive was far better organized than previous assaults in this area, they said, and the Finns gave evidence of strong defensive power by halting the Red army's new armored sleds while under a terrific artillery and air attack.

Navy Expansion Delay Impends As Departments Dispute Costs

Roosevelt Takes Side of Morgenthau In Argument Over Whether Builders May Charge for New Equipment Expense

By John G. Norris

Post Staff Writer

Possibility of a shipbuilding impasse delaying the naval expansion program appeared last night as President Roosevelt was disclosed as having rejected a plan presented by the Navy transferring authority to determine shipbuilding costs from the Treasury to the Secretary of the Navy.

The Chief Executive sided with Secretary Morgenthau in an undercover dispute between the two departments over legislation tentatively written into the $670,000,000 new fleet enlargement bill by the House Naval Committee at the request of the Navy.

Naval officials say the legislation is required because shipbuilding firms insist they will not expand their yards to care for the new program unless they can include the cost of new shipways and facilities in the cost of the new ships. The Treasury Department has refused to permit this.

Morgenthau Cites Costs

Secretary Morgentheau is reported to oppose the move on the ground it would result in higher shipbuilding costs. He is said to disfavor the Government bearing the cost of enlarging private shipbuilding yards with the new facilities becoming the property of the shipbuilders.

Chairman Vinson, of the House Naval Committee, revealing the opposition of President Roosevelt and Secretary Morgenthau to the legislation, said it will be removed from the Navy bill before the measure is reported to the House later this week.

Naval officials would not be quoted in the matter yesterday, but evidently were quite concerned that shipbuilders would carry out their threat not to expand their plants if they must pay for the additional facilities and could not carry out the fleet expansion program as planned.

Profits Now Are Limited

Present law limits firms to a profit of 10 per cent and provides that the Treasury shall determine what portion of plant costs can be charged as construction expense.

Shipbuilders contend the present expanded naval construction will not last and they will be left with idle shipways which will be taxable liabilities. They informed the Navy Department they will not enlarge their plants if the costs will eat up their profits.

The Navy proposed to transfer the authority to determine what may be charged as costs. Only the President and the Federal courts could review the Navy Secretary's ruling under the proposed program.

Hearings on the expansion bill were wound up yesterday with the testimony of representatives of the National Council for the Prevention of War in opposition to the measure.

Frederick J. Libby, executive secretary, urged a Congressional determination of foreign policy before any more warships are voted. Former Representative Rankin said of the Army and Navy:

"These two departments . . . have succeeded in working a spell on Congressmen so that many of them are willing to hold their noses and swallow anything and everything the nonuniformed officers of the War and Navy demand."

Allied Chiefs Meet to Rush Aid to Finland

London Predicts Defenders Can Match Red Air Force in May

By the Associated Press

Paris, Feb. 5.—The Allied Supreme War Council, meeting for the fifth time since the beginning of the European conflict, was reported tonight by the war ministry to have reached "complete accord" on measures "assuring the greatest efficacy of French-British collaboration."

"It can be assumed that the war in Finland took a prominent place in the discussions of the Allied war chiefs," the authoritative British Press Association said.

"This would undoubtedly be one of 'the various factors of the present situation' mentioned in the official communique as affecting the general conduct of the war," the correspondent added.

Finns to Get Planes

Coincident with this report, an estimate was circulated in London that Finland will have enough planes at her disposal by May—when the snow melts—to hold the huge Soviet Russian airforce in check.

The French and British general staffs held a conference between the morning and afternoon meetings of the supreme war council.

Premier Daladier, still limping from a foot injury, and Prime Minister Chamberlain presided jointly over the all-day session of high ranking war chieftains.

Daladier was quoted as saying later that he had "never seen such an harmonious meeting and one which resulted in such unity of views."

Food Question Studied

The brief war ministry communique said the council had "examined in all their aspects the various elements of the present situation" and added that "the question of food stocks was notably studied."

Representing Britain, besides Chamberlain, were Foreign Secretary Halifax, First Lord of the Admiralty Churchill, War Secretary Stanley, Foreign Undersecretary Cadogan, Chief of Naval Staff Admiral Pound, Gen. Ironside, chief of the imperial defense staff, and Maj. Gen. Hastings L. Ismay, secretary of the imperial defense committee.

France was represented by Daladier, Navy Minister Campinchi, Air Minister La Chambre, Gen. Vuillemin, air force chief of staff; Admiral Darlan, supreme commander of all naval forces; Auguste Chameptier de Ribes, foreign undersecretary; Alexis Leger, secretary general of the foreign office; Gen. Gamelin, commander-in-chief of the French-British armies, and Gen. de Camp, chief of Daladier's military cabinet.

Finnish Aid Sped

London (Tuesday), Feb. 6 (U.P.).—British and French aid to Finland may be increased and speeded up as result of decisions taken by the Allied Supreme War Council in Paris yesterday, it was reported early today.

These unofficial reports said the Allied leaders decided the chances of the war being extended to Scandinavia are considerably greater than the menaces to Holland and Belgium at the present time.

Reports reached London that Premier Daladier had favored breaking off diplomatic relations with Russia but that the British ministers were said to have contended that the Allies should let Moscow take the initiative along any such lines.

Air Force Quadrupled

Finland's military air force is estimated here to have been quadrupled since the Soviet invasion began two months ago, including fighting, coastal reconnaissance and bombing planes from abroad.

The Soviets' full strength has been put at about 5,000 first-line planes plus an unknown number of obsolete machines and reserves thought to be less than 1,600 of the modern types.

This total has been distributed between the zones east and west of Lake Baikal and there is understood to be a strict policy against reinforcing one from the other.

Germans Hail Balkan Accord To Avoid War

Franco-British 'Plot' To Spread Conflict Declared Foiled

By Otto D. Tolischus

Copyright by New York Times.

Berlin, Feb. 5.—Intent on keeping Germany's back free politically, militarily and economically, German official quarters and the press declare themselves highly satisfied with the results of the Balkan conference at which the participating powers proclaimed their determination to keep out of the war.

Despite some reservations regarding Turkey there were good words for all the Balkan powers who were credited with having defeated a Franco-British plot to drag them into war against Germany. Germans echo the Balkan recognition of Italy's "valuable contribution toward the maintenance of peace in southeastern Europe."

"Without doubt," writes the Berlin Nachtausgabe, "the result of the Balkan conference is a bitter disappointment to England," and Der Anoriff adds:

"Germany naturally indorses the wish of the Balkan countries to keep the war away from themselves. We make no improper demands, but we do not want to see any Franco-British intrigues in the southeast. Neither of the two western powers is so geographically united with central Europe that it would have the right to stick its nose in central European affairs, especially in time of war."

Count von der Schulenberg, the German ambassador to Moscow, and Conrad Bluecher, German minister to Helsinki, have arrived in Berlin.

The Russo-Finnish conflict is said to be unwelcome to Germany because it interferes with Germany's supplies.

Technically the two diplomats were summoned to Berlin merely for report.

A German peace move is regarded as possible, but only when the relative positions of Russia as a great power and Finland as a small country have demonstrated themselves more fully in the military situation.

Hungarians Cautious

Copyright by New York Times

Budapest, Feb. 5.—Hungarian official quarters have taken no attitude on the result of the Balkan Entente meeting.

There is, however, one point in the official communique to which special attention is paid here. It is paragraph three, expressing the endeavor of the Balkan Entente to preserve the independence and national territory of member states. This might be taken as a compromise substitute for an express guarantee of territories.

Italian Leaders Happy

Copyright by New York Times

Rome, Feb. 5.—The Balkan powers clearly satisfied Italy with the decisions or lack of them taken at Belgrade. Rome was hoping for a generally negative result and considers that was what happened.

The status quo is being maintained and peace preserved. There are no blocs or military alliances which either could strengthen the entente internally, so as to make the Balkan states independent, or represent a challenge to the belligerent powers.

Italian leaders are happy at the cordial attitude of the Entente ministers toward Rome and the recognition that Premier Mussolini's policy has helped to keep war out of the peninsula. This is the line taken by Virginio Gayda and other commentators.

3d Parley on Free India Fails; Gandhi, Viceroy Stand Pat

By the Associated Press

New Delhi, India, Feb. 5.—Mohandas K. Gandhi and Viceroy Lord Linlithgow failed today to agree on Indian demands for independence—third such stalemate since the European war started.

Gandhi apparently stood firm on the Congress (Nationalist) Party demand for immediate consideration of India's independence while Lord Linlithgow reiterated Britain's stand to postpone final action until after the war.

An authorized summary by British officials emphasized that Britain regarded the defense of India a vital subject which could not be handed over to India in any future constitution without joint consultation and mutually-agreed procedure.

The British statesman and the leader of India's millions of Hindus conferred for two and a half hours. As Gandhi left the conference, he made it clear the British proposals did not meet the Congress Party demands.

The communique said the viceroy repeated British assurance India's independence would be considered "when the time came"—presumably after the war—and suggested "that the Federal scheme act, while at present in suspense, afforded the swiftest stepping stone toward dominion status."

Resignation of the eight provincial governments controlled by the Congress Party, in protest over the delay, suspended operation of this plan, which gave a measure of autonomy to 11 of the 15 provinces in British India.

Gandhi hinted he would leave New Delhi tomorrow without waiting for the outcome of the talks between the viceroy and Mohammed Ali Jinnah, president of the All-India Moslem League, which represents a large minority party.

The Moslems have opposed Congress Party demands on the grounds they would not have sufficient voice in a Congress Party government.

Liberty Union Bars 'Isms' On Its Staff

Stalinists, Nazis And Fascists Kept From Policy Jobs

By the Associated Press

New York, Feb. 5.—Directors of the American Civil Liberties Union today adopted a resolution banning supporters of communism, nazism or fascism from serving on the A. C. L. U.'s governing committees or staff.

The resolution specifically forbade such posts to anyone belonging to "any political organization which supports totalitarian dictatorship in any country, or who by his public declarations indicates his support of such principles."

Within this category it included the Communist Party, the German-American Bund, "as well as native organizations with obvious anti-democratic objectives or practices."

Board Makes Statement

The board also accepted the resignation of Dr. Harry F. Ward, of Union Theological Seminary, A. C. L. U. chairman for 20 years. The Rev. John Haynes Holmes, outspoken critic of communism, will serve as acting chairman. Other officers were reelected.

The board issued a statement declaring that no Communists ever had been elected to A. C. L. U.'s national committee, but that two committee members, William Z. Foster and Elizabeth Gurley Flynn, had later joined the Communist Party.

"The occasion for raising this issue at this time is the increasing tension which has resulted everywhere from the direction of the Communist international movement since the Soviet-Nazi pact," the statement said.

Minority in Opposition

"Nobody suggests that any person should be excluded from membership in the Union, nor that the Union should be any less zealous in the defense of Communists' rights. The sole issue raised is one of propriety affecting the governing committees in terms of a consistent attitude in support of the principles of civil liberties."

A minority group opposing the resolution said it would "disappoint all those who feel that the civil liberties union is the last organization in the world to start a species of Red-hunt, which is precisely what this carefully dressed-up resolution aims to do."

Flames Drive Score To Street Here

Several firemen were overcome by smoke and more than a score of tenants were forced to leave their apartments early yesterday when flames destroyed a three-room flat at the Belvedere, 1301 Massachusetts avenue northwest.

The two-alarm fire started in the kitchen of a fifth floor apartment occupied by William W. Wilson and Mrs. Wilson, both of whom had left for work before the blaze was discovered by Mrs. Marion Halpine, occupant of a nearby apartment.

Damages were estimated at $500.

British Planes Sink U-Boat Taking Aim

Copyright by New York Times

A Canadian Port, Feb. 5.—A British liner docking here safely today brought a thrilling story of the repulse and probable destruction of a German submarine by Royal Air Force bombers just as it was preparing to torpedo the ship.

The torpedo attempt was the climax of a series of mishaps. The liner, originally scheduled to sail from a British port on January 12, was first delayed for 24 hours by a report that mines had been sown outside the harbor.

When the channel had been satisfactorily swept and she did get away, she took a course which brought her on a reef and examination revealed damage which made it necessary to return for repairs.

She was getting under way escort of four armed trawlers when the German submarine appeared. The liner's siren sounded the alarm and her passengers swarmed on deck, ready to take to the boats. They could see the U-boat in the distance, apparently maneuvering into position to aim her torpedoes at the crippled vessel and prepared for the worst.

Suddenly, out of the clouds, two British bombers were seen diving straight down at the submarine. Their bombs churned the water and the submarine vanished, reportedly leaving pieces of wreckage and a pool of oil. The liner re-entered the harbor unscathed.

She made repairs and after some days delay was again on her way, this time under full escort and unmolested.

was found in the line at the Central Union Mission.

Mr. Sloan came to Washington during the war and worked at the Navy Yard. Subsequently he started an interior decorating business which was a moderate success until the depression ruined it. Shortly afterward an attack of influenza left him totally deaf.

Widespread publication of his face and story brought immediate benefit in the form of an electrical hearing device. For months the Catholic Charities saw that he was supplied with funds for food and lodging. More recently he was employed by Goodwill Industries.

Records of the Catholic Charities show Mr. Sloan was born June 2, 1876, "somewhere in Pennsylvania."

Dr. A. Magruder MacDonald, the District coroner, said Mr. Sloan died of natural causes. Apparently his illness had been short for he was seen by acquaintances a few days ago looking in good health "and, as always, cheerful."

Authorities last night were trying to arrange with his nearest known relative, a sister living in Brooklyn, for burial.

15 Key Employes Share $3,000,000 Paint Estate

Ownership and Control of Factory Gravell Founded Are Willed to Workers; Stock to Stay in Trust 10 Years

By the Associated Press

Ambler, Pa., Feb. 5.—Fifteen key employes of the late J. Harvey Gravell, paint manufacturer who once gave his workers a $100,000 Christmas gift, learned today they had been left the bulk of his $3,000,000 estate.

Gravell, former president of the American Chemical Paint Co., died December 8.

"It is my purpose in the disposition of my estate," Gravell wrote, "to place the control and ownership of it and of the enterprises which have produced it, largely in the hands of my business associates and employes who have been engaged with me in the operation and management of the business."

The industrialist, who said he started in business with nothing but "a bucket, a stick and an idea," also bequeathed $100,000 each to a brother, Thomas, and his secretary, Clara C. Bardona.

He placed the stock of his company in trust for the 15 employes for 10 years. After that they will own it outright.

Gravell in 1937 gave his employes, numbering more than 100 in all the plants, $100,000 to pay off their personal debts.

The next year he distributed $75,000. One Christmas, in addition to gifts to employes, he gave $300 to each employe's wife, announcing that he believed this was only proper, because "after all, it's the wife who is the homemaker, and it is she who makes the men good employes."

ence." All political parties are represented, she pointed out.

The A. Y. C. replied to Hamilton through Administrative Chairman Francis Williams, who issued a statement, saying:

"We hope Mr. Hamilton's refusal is not an indication that his own brand of Americanism is of so frail a nature that he doubts the wisdom of submitting it to a representative gathering of youth. The young people of this country . . . are not afraid of discussing anything with anyone."

Only one Republican, Representative Edith Nourse Rogers, of Massachusetts, was among the 13 Senators and 27 Representatives invited to last night's meeting at the White House. Mrs. Roosevelt said the list was drawn up by the A. Y. C. to include those who had shown interest in youth problems.

No Party Line

The President's wife said neither she nor the A. Y. C. intended to draw any party line at the conference. While reporters were barred from the proceedings, it was understood that plans would be discussed for the Citizenship Institute to be held here by the A. Y. C. February 9 to 12.

Earlier Mrs. Roosevelt had asked 100 women leaders to help solve the problem of putting American young people to work at a White House conference in the morning, opening a two-day session called by the National Youth Administration.

Federal Security Administrator Paul V. McNutt said he hoped the conference would make suggestions for providing job security, "which is the real social security" for young women.

Idle Millions Cited

NYA Administrator Aubrey Williams told the women that four or five million young people were "in a blind alley" without jobs, and their training in American idealism was going to waste.

Although 700,000 young people have been put to work by the NYA, he said, millions more remain to be helped.

Other speakers at the morning session were Dr. Floyd W. Reeves, director of the American Youth Commission; Mrs. Dorothy Canfield Fisher, and Mrs. Betty Lindley, director of women's work of the NYA.

Education Discussed

At the afternoon session the need for better economic education among young people was stressed by Mrs. Eleanor Copenhaver Anderson, of the Young Women's Christian Association industrial department, and Miss Charlotte Carr, head resident of Hull House, Chicago.

Dr. Mary H. S. Hayes, NYA director of employment, reported that women are now employed in nearly every occupation except such heavy labor as boiler-making and stone-cutting. Other speakers at the session, held at the Mayflower Hotel, were Mrs. Isabella Greenway King, former Representative from Arizona; Miss Bess Bloodworth, Brooklyn department store executive; Mrs. David Cushman Coyle, and Mary Jean McKay, president of the National Student Federation. Dean Harriet Elliot, of the North Carolina State College for women, presided.

The conference will hold two more sessions at the White House today.

DOCTORS WARN FOLKS WHO ARE CONSTIPATED

IT IS SAID constipation causes many human discomforts—headaches, lack of energy and mental dullness being but a few. BUT DON'T WORRY—

For years a noted Ohio Doctor, Dr. F. M. Edwards, successfully treated scores of patients for constipation with his famous Dr. Edwards' Olive Tablets—now sold by druggists everywhere.

Olive Tablets, being purely vegetable, are wonderful! They not only gently yet thoroughly cleanse the bowels but ALSO assist liver bile flow to help digest fatty foods. Test their goodness TONIGHT without fail! 15¢, 30¢, 60¢.

How to tell if there's a "pack" in the price!

THERE'S a necessary difference between the advertised price of an automobile delivered at the factory, and the price you pay for it delivered here in your home town.

That difference covers a charge for transportation from the factory to you, based on rail rates, and also the dealer's charge for any extra equipment or accessories that you may elect to buy.

That's all there is to the difference. At least, that's all there should be. But sometimes an extra item that you can't quite put your finger on, gets included in that final delivered price.

The trade has a word for this extra item. It calls it a "pack." Usually it's tucked in there to allow for "dickering" with you on the used car you trade in. Sometimes it's simply plus profit.

In the public interest, and to enable you more accurately to judge the values we offer, we General Motors dealers are making the details of pricing unmistakably plain.

On every car on our showroom floors we are displaying the standard GM "plainview" price tag pictured here.

This tag shows you every item that goes into our final delivered prices—and gives you a helpful yardstick for measuring exactly what your money buys alike from us or from others.

Similar information is given you on a wall chart we display, and in an itemized invoice supplied you when you buy.

Come see the splendid new General Motors cars for 1940 that we have now on view. We believe you will agree they are the best-made, best-styled, best-performing cars we've ever sold.

Examine their features. Check their quality, point by point. Then consider the price tag. Thus you appraise for yourself their impressive merit and their outstanding value.

This is the standard price tag used by General Motors dealers to show what makes up the prices of new cars delivered to customers. "PRICE OF CAR" means the price we charge for the car itself including reimbursement for Federal Tax and conditioning — "TRANSPORTATION CHARGE" means a charge for transportation from factory to you, based on rail rates — "OPTIONAL EQUIPMENT AND ACCESSORIES" means the charge for any extra equipment or accessories you elect to buy.

Nelson B. Bell About the Showshops

Bernard Shaw Rings Up His Fiftieth Stage Play

'Geneva' Equals Fitch's Record With 'Girls;' Eddie Dowling to Produce New Carroll Play; This, That and the Other About the Theater

WITH THE PRESENTATION of his play, "Geneva," at the Henry Miller Theater in New York, under the aegis of Gilbert Miller, George Bernard Shaw achieves a distinction that was reached some 25 or 30 years ago by a less profound, but equally popular playwright of an earlier generation.

BELL.

"Geneva" is the fiftieth Shaw play to be produced. The late Clyde Fitch reached the same milepost of productivity with his rollicking comedy of "Girls," given its premiere in the Belasco Theater in this city in the early years of the century.

For a season or two prior to the production of "Girls," Mr. Fitch's power and popularity had been supposed to be waning. This gay frivolity brought about his complete rehabilitation in public favor. Whether "Geneva" will serve a similar useful purpose in Shaw's case remains to be seen, what with the mixed enthusiasms it inspired among the New York critical fraternity.

Mr. Fitch, to be sure, never wrote a "Saint Joan" in all of his 50 plays, but Mr. Shaw, on the other hand, never has written a "Girls"—probably quite to his own satisfaction—in all of his half-hundred. It is honor enough that both should have seen so many of their works reach the boards.

Any mention of Clyde Fitch must recall to the minds of the theater's initiate the incident of his presenting the late Charles Frohman, producer of many of his plays, with an autographed photograph of himself. It was inscribed, "To C. F. from c. f."

Come the mail.

"Dear Nelson: I am sending you the newest 'still' on my current picture 'Forty Little Mothers.'

"With Eddie Cantor the only poppa, well, you can realize the possibilities. No fooling, this is the first film I have ever had where I play a legitimate role; that of a college professor who makes a great many sacrifices for an adopted baby.

"The part of the professor gives me a grand opportunity to do some emoting, and although I don't believe that Spencer Tracy will quit when he sees me, I think you will like this new Cantor picture. Say, Nels, can it be that being a grandfather has brought some talent with it? If it has, please don't keep it quiet!

"With good wishes and hoping to see you soon from the screen, and maybe 'in person,' I am, cordially yours (Signed) EDDIE CANTOR."

Okay, Eddie, now let's see the picture.

Reversing the Loew stunt of bringing a giant to town to attract interest to "Gulliver's Traveles," the feature-length Technicolor cartoon, Sidney B. Lust's Hyattsville Theater is diverting its youthful patrons through today by presenting an American Lilliputian in the lobby to greet them. He is Bob Hinkson, who describes himself as "19 years old, 3 feet 6 inches tall, every inch a man, and 85 pounds of dynamite." He juggles and does tricks for the edification of the youngsters and in their eyes lives up to his self-description.

It seems worthy of note, in passing, that the reason the Chicago company of "Life With Father" is "breaking in" in Baltimore—instead of Washington, where it could have taken advantage of the great enthusiasm the original New York cast aroused in the play in its one "command performance" for the President's birthday celebrations—is the District's ill-judged but rigidly enforced child labor law. There are three minors in the cast of "Life With Father," and they are prohibited from making commercial appearances in the National Capital.

When Paul Vincent Carroll was in town to witness a performance of his "The White Steed" at the National, you may recall that he confided to this desk that he had a new play called "The Old Foolishness" about ready, which he thought Eddie Dowling, who introduced Mr. Carroll to America with "Shadow and Substance," might produce. Mr. Dowling now has the script and finds a fine role for himself in it. Quite evidently he wishes to pack the supporting cast with Fitzgeralds. He already has signed Barry Fitzgerald and hopes to secure Geraldine Fitzgerald from the films for the leading feminine part. Despite her fine work in "Wuthering Heights," "Dark Victory" and "A Child Is Born," her Hollywood commitments may permit her to accept by next fall, when the play is scheduled for production.

During the week beginning Friday, the dust will be pretty thoroughly blown out of the pipes of that multiple-manual Wurlitzer organ at Loew's Capitol Theater. Art Brown, of WOL, will preside at the console, not only as solo artist, but also as whipper-upper of that intimate item of entertainment, the community sing. The musicianly Mr. Brown is a past master at this sort of thing.

The rumor is being flicked about that a lively tilt is going on between the Warner Brothers and Paramount for the screen rights to "The Male Animal," the James Thurber-Elliott Nugent morsel that has whipped its way to the top among current Broadway hits. The Warners are said to want the piece for James Cagney; Paramount as an ideal vehicle for Harold Lloyd—and where has he been all this time? It is a hard job to hitch up the notion that the same play could be so perfect a fitting for stars so diametrically opposed in personality, style and method as Cagney and Lloyd. They're about as much alike as Victor McLaglen and George Arliss!

Balm-in-Gilead Note

That "invisible man" probably had one advantage, anyway. These dingbusted grippe germs couldn't find him!

In Hollywood

Hollywood, Feb. 25.

One of the most unusual child actors to hit Hollywood in a long time is little Johnny Russell, whom you'll see with Shirley Temple in "The Blue Bird." He's six, but thinks—and talks — like a grown-up. He developed a terrific fondness for Shirley and during the picture followed her everywhere—was distressed because she didn't use big words. Said to her one day: "Shirley, how do you contemplate amusing yourself this afternoon?" Shirley, a bit annoyed, answered: "Well, I know what my plans are." Just then Director Walter Lang handed him some dialogue. Johnny read it, said: "It's too childish—but I suppose I'll have to do it. After all, I'm in the movies now." Chatting with him one day, I almost fell out of my chair when Johnny said, "You know, I like to talk to you. You imbue me with an abundance of confidence." For toys he favors maps of Europe, is way up on war news and said: "Confidentially, Miss Hopper, I think Hitler is a skunk." . . .

HOPPER

Did you know R. C. Sherriff, author of "Journey's End," distinguished himself in London? After the war he took a course in archeolog. at Oxford, and his professor was not only interesting but interested in Sherriff and vice versa. The professor told him that he knew of some Roman ruins in Sussex Downs. Most people laughed at him, Sherriff didn't. They got together a group interested in the same things, and started to dig. And uncovered part of the most marvelous Roman city, big as our Hollywood bowl, which they promptly turned over to the nation . . . Now Sherriff is going into politics, will no doubt end up in the House of Parliament and probably be knighted and if he beats Noel Coward to that honor, more than fur will fly . . . And speaking of fame, wait till you see Bob Taylor with a mustache and in a uniform in "Waterloo Bridge." For those fans who have been disgusted at the roles he's been getting, you can settle back and relax. He's Leo's 1940 bet for Metro or I miss my guess . . .

It was no idle threat that Peter Lorre made a couple of years ago when he said he was going to sink every bit of available cash into story properties. And now the studios are amazed to find out how many he's tied up. At least $500,000 worth of wonderful picture material. One he'd like to do himself is "Good Soldier Schenelk" a European best seller, satiré on war, leading character a soldier who was a Schulemiel, but finally comes out on top. Another one is "Secret Agent," the book, not the picture, Warners made. And "Casper House." At present time, he's more than content playing a jewel thief with Zorina in "I Am an Adventuress." He said he never had so much fun, because with Greg Ratoff, Eric von Stroheim, Zorina and his own, actors didn't get in the way—accents did.

Elise Knox, who's under contract to Twentieth Century was looking a little peaked and sent to a doctor for a check-up. Being new in our own, she saw a place that looked like a hospital, went in, and a white-uniformed attendant came and said: "Where is the patient?" She smiled: "I am." "I'm sorry, miss," said he, "we only take cats and dogs."

Eleanor Powell, if she can arrange it with Metro, plans to take six months off next fall and tour America with her own ballet, which will combine the Russian and our modern dances, which is certainly a new trend. She'll clean up. Hope studio lets her do it . . . And while we're used to opera and picture stars touring, I believe Kenney Baker will be the first radio singer to go concerting. He sings not only operatic pieces, but modern songs. Radio was his great builder-upper.

Miss Hellman's Ruthless Heroine

TALLULAH BANKHEAD
as she appears in the role of Regina Giddens in Lillian Hellman's play of "The Little Foxes," which opened its first Washington engagement at the National Theater last night. It comes to the Capital direct from its year's run on Broadway

The New Yorker

By Leonard Lyons

HARRY CAREY, who was a cowboy star in the silent-movie days, is coming to New York soon to apear in "Heavenly Express" . . . Carey now confesses that he was aided in his new career—the new jobs he's been getting in Hollywood—by a mistake made by an MGM employe. . . When an important MGM official died the employe was instructed to notify the people selected as pallbearers. "Get Carey," was the reminder. . . And so Harry Carey appeared in this all-important role of honor . . . although the "Carey" intended really was the MGM writer, Carey Wilson.

JOHN L. LEWIS is coming to New York to attend the Heywood Broun Memorial meeting February 12 . . . Leo Casey, publicist for the New York World's Fair, is feuding with the fair's directorate. The friction is based upon budget limitations . . . The author of that "England, Be Tough With America" dispatch for the London Daily Express was C. V. R. Thompson—who wrote "I Lost My English Accent." This week Thompson received a postcard from his sister in London. The postcard read: "I've been feeling ill"—and was stamped: "Opened by the Censor" . . . LaGuardia hasn't cracked back at those Brooklyn jurists because he wants Amen's investigation dropped. District Attorney O'Dwyer wants Amen to continue, explaining: "It's his rubbish. Let him clean it up."

NEWBOLD MORRIS, head of the City Council, went to Chamberlain Brown's talent-hunt meeting, but was stopped at the door because he had no ticket . . . "I'm expected here," Morris assured . . . "Are you an actor?" the doorman persisted . . . "I," Morris announced," am with the Greatest Show on Earth—the City Council."

PAUL STEWART, who is portraying the Milton Berle role in "See My Lawyer," has been signed for Chester Erskine's "The Weak Link" . . . Dr. Laurence Farmer, author of the new book, "What's Your Allergy?" reports the case of a man on whose hands rashes broke out—but only on Sundays. After weeks of investigation, Dr. Farmer suddenly remembered that the one thing this man touched on Sundays, and not on other days, was the rotogravure section of the Sunday papers. His test verified it—that rotogravure ink was he cause . . . Sinclair Lewis is very much disturbed—because he's heard that Theodore Dreiser may follow him in a stage career . . . Since Jim Thurber clicked in "The Male Animal," every employe of the New Yorker is writing a play.

THE DELUGE of actors descending upon the White House these past few weeks departed without pocketing a single memento of the visit. Mrs. Roosevelt realizes the temptation, and tactfully hints: "When we first came here we started to lose so many napkins, ashtrays and tableware that it worried us. But now we know where everything goes" . . . Of all the stories told by the Broadway visitors, the President laughed most at Max Gordon's tale of two acrobats standing in front of the Palace in November, 1936, and one of them asking: "Gonna vote for Roosevelt tomorrow?" to which the other replied: "Wottsamatter with the guy in there now?"

HAROLD CLURMAN of the Group Theater is responsible for starting William Saroyan on his drama career. When the director wrote to Saroyan four years ago the reply was in pencil, on a postcard, and read: "Okay. I've never tried it. I'll write a great one. But I must direct it" . . . Virginia OBrien, one of the most promising members of "Meet the People"—the Hollywood revue which Ray Goetz is bringing to New York—won't accompany the cast East. Her father, the Los Angeles prosecutor, is opposed to her living in the Wicked City . . . Lieut. Gen. Hugh A. Drum, commandant of the Second Corps Area, has seen "Hellzapoppin" four times—and sends his entire staff to see it. "Because," he explains, "it is a grat display of rhythm, precision and deliberate maneuver-timing."

A NEW YORK publisher had words with his wife while they were en route to the Stork Club. She went home alone, but he entered the cafe . . . After two hours there he felt remorseful and decided to go home to her In the lobby he saw the perfume display case, selected the largest and prettiest bottle of perfume and ordered: "I want that. Send the bill to my office. I'll take it with me" . . . "But, that," the attendant started to tell him . . . "I'll take it," he shouted, "and not another word" . . . The meek attendant delivered the bottle to the publisher, who went home, hugging his peace offering . . . unaware of the fact that it was a sample bottle, filled with colored water.

'Little Foxes' Is a Tragic Masterpiece

Tallulah Bankhead And Superlative Cast Triumph at National

By Nelson B. Bell

"THE LITTLE FOXES." Herman Shumlin presents Tallulah Bankhead in the play in three acts by Lillian Hellman. Staged by Mr. Shumlin. Setting designed by Howard Bay; costumes by Aline Bernadeis. At the National Theater.

Miss Tallulah Bankhead's was a complete triumph in the National Theater last night.

It was a triumph, to be sure, of bitterness, for it is a bitter, grim and relentless play that Lillian Hellman has written in "The Little Foxes." But it was a triumph also of courage, honesty and artistic integrity that embraced not only the star but every member of her superbly competent supporting cast.

"The Little Foxes" is a drama of Macbethian avarice and Borgian ruthlessness. Closely bound up in the money lust of the Hubbards—two sons and a daughter of a family of the South consumed by self-interest and unfettered by ties of blood or love—it sets forth a story of a greed that withers all finer impulses of heart and mind. Both physically and psychologically it is starkly and forbiddingly tragic. Yet it is so tightly woven, so impeccable in characterization, motivation and development as to be unerringly forceful, gripping and almost painfully real.

Hinging on a single financial deal that is to make millions for an acquisitive family that never before has ventured beyond the limits of a strictly local exercise of questionable business practices, "The Little Foxes" lays bare the predatory instincts of a group combatting a common, but variant, frustration. The blight of the ambition that actuates these venomously warring brothers and sister extends even to their children. The pathos of the drama is expressed in the abortive romance of Regina Giddens' sweet and ingenuous daughter and her Brother Oscar's craven son, the malleable tool of his scheming elders.

A House Divided

The major figures in the development of Miss Hellman's incisive play are Regina Giddens, who married a man she did not love for advantages she failed to realize: her husband, Horace; her brothers, Benjamin and Oscar Hubbard, and Oscar's mentally and sometimes physically tortured wife, Birdie. Regina is the composite Lady Macbeth-Lucrezia Borgia of the piece, her husband the retributive and sagacious "silent partner" of immense understanding; her brothers the conniving business pirates and Birdie the drama's symbol of utter defeatism.

The character of Regina Giddens restores Miss Bankhead to the high estate in the American theater to which she long has been entitled but from which she long has been debarred by want of a suitable vehicle. Her Regina is a cold, heartless, immeasurably hard study in selfishness and singleness of destructive purpose. To the part she brings a complete equipment for a faithful and vividly repellant etching. It is a part in which Miss Bankhead must play not only an uncompromisingly hateful wife, but a viciously heartless mother, save for a softer moment or two at the very end of the play. There is unfailing strength and occasional tenderness in her portrayal. The role seems to have been made for her.

Is All-Embracing Triumph

Next to the star, Patricia Collinge, a former member of the old Columbia Players, achieves the greatest tour de force. Her characterization of the disillusioned and distraught Birdie is one of the treasures that will be stored in memory as one of the shining examples of this generation's claim to greatness in the theater. Frank Conroy, as the invalid Horace Giddens, lends the two acts in which he appears the strength of a sound, valid and convincing characterization. Words of equal praise should be scattered in the direction of Charles Dingle and Carl Benton Reid for their contrasting and equally solid personifications of Benjamin and Oscar Hubbard. Dan Duryea is not quite so infallibly the true picture of Leo Hubbard that Eugenia Rawls invariably is of Alexandra Giddens. Lee Baker, in the brief role of William Marshall, the Northern industrialist, that estimable Negro actress Abbie Mitchell, and John Marriott, as the two dusky servitors of the Giddens household, add their quota to the balance of as fine a cast as the season has seen.

Curtain calls were too many to count last night, at the hands of one of the most brilliant capacity first-night audiences that National recently has housed.

Close-Ups and Long-Shots Of the Motion Picture Scene

Hollywood, Feb. 5 (INS).—Harold Lloyd is putting away his famous "Specs" in the old make-up box he's used for 20 years as a star to turn producer only on his next RKO picture, "Three Girls and a Gob." But fans who have been loyal to Harold for so long needn't get too down-hearted He hasn't yet made up his mind whether he is giving up the screen for good or not to put his feet on top of a desk and merely boss the proceedings.

LOUELLA PARSONS

At first, he was supposed to star in, as well as produce, "Three Girls and a Gob." But on reading ever the story, producer Lloyd decided that actor Lloyd wasn't the right type. George Schaefer, president of RKO, suggested the yarn be changed to fit his screen personality—but Harold likes Grover Jones' original comedy-drama so well he doesn't want to tamper with it. In the meantime, he's looking around for a whooper-dooper cast to headline his first movie venture in which he isn't in front of the camera.

What a curious change in Joan Crawford's destiny in just a few months. Less than a year ago she was rumored on the toboggan at M-G-M. Roles she asked for were given to other stars. One of the stories she wanted most to do was "May Flavin" with the powers-that-be said "No." But in an amazingly short time—how things have changed. The way the M-G-M crowd is raving, you'd think they had a brand new "discovery" in the Crawford of "Susan and God" and "Strange Cargo." They're so excited over the new Joan that she can once again have her heart's desire—and to prove it, Joe Mankiewicz is asking her to do "May Flavin"—the story they said "No" to less than a year ago.

Snapshots of Hollywood collected at random: The Hal Roach, jr—Mrs. Willis Hunt, jr. romance looks serious; Joan Crawford and Lee Bowman, with three dates in one week to their credit, will bear watching; Leonard Hanna and Windsor French cruising in Mexico are expected in Hollywood. Let's hope they don't get lost. We couldn't stand any more Mexican lost-in-the-wilds melodramas about Hollywood stars; Toni Lanier is wearing a new 50-carat topaz and a new fur coat. Three guesses who gave it to her? Sally Eilers, Ruth and Paul Zukerman, Jean and Charlie Feldman, arrive in Hollywood tomorrow; Joe Schenck went to bet on horse number one and instead was given a ticket on number five which won and paid 17 to 1; Rosalind Russell is in the Cedars of Lebanon for a minor operation.

Diane Lewis Powell, Bill's bride, is home with a bad case of "flu;" Vivien Leigh and Laurence Oliver start rehearsing on "Romeo and Juliet" March 8. They open their tour in San Francisco; Judith Anderson shopping for a house and will live here; Marlene Deitrich's real heart interest is a rich man unknown to Hollywood; the Buster Colliers have taken a house in San Fernando Valley; Brenda Joyce arrived in New York and was only there an hour when she was told to return home for "Maryland." She begged so hard to be allowed to stay longer they gave her an additional three days. This is her first visit to the big town; Lillian Bond with Ricardo Cortez at Ciro's and I must say she looked mighty well.

That's all for today. See you tomorrow!

Straus Notes New Interest In Housing

He Terms 'Healthy' Public Attention To Home Building

A new and "healthy" interest in the middle-income housing market is noticeable today in the American building industry, Nathan Straus, administrator of the United States Housing Authority, said yesterday.

The housing industry has been "sick for a long time," he told the Washington Building Congress at a luncheon at the National Press Club. Builders have failed to increase the "satisfaction value" of houses as the quality of other, less expensive, commodities has improved, he explained.

Straus said private builders had been constructing homes only for the upper-income group and neglecting other markets although "two-thirds of the people in this country are economically competent enough to buy decent, sanitary housing."

At present, he said, "at least 9,000,000 dwelling units must be built within the next 10 years "to correct an existing and expected shortage of homes that are serviceable by any standard."

The $280,000,000 housing program going forward under the USHA, he continued, will provide homes for 160,000 families formerly living in slums.

Not a Relief Project

Rheese Burket, architect, asked Straus whether housing subsidies could be increased during depressions to prevent eviction of persons on relief.

Straus replied his agency was not a relief project and that tenants were expected to pay rent.

He added no provision had been made for increased subsidies to prevent evictions.

In reply to a question by Theodore L. Coe, of the American Institute of Architects, Straus said the two-year life of the USHA was insufficient to determine whether all loans for buildings would be paid.

During that period, he stated, payments have been more than adequate to carry loans already made.

Discussion which preceded creation of the USHA, he pointed out, has made the United States conscious of the need for many new houses.

"Within the next few years," he said, "I confidently expect to see private enterprise building decent sanitary homes for families with annual incomes as low as $1,400 in the South and as low as $1,600 in the North."

Slum clearance, he remarked, will result in a reduction in the cost of law enforcement since it eliminates the environment which encourages crime, immorality, ignorance and disease.

Waiting Lists Long

Public housing projects, he said, are being constructed at lower cost per family than private builders believed possible.

He told Hector Aring, president of the congress, that USHA housing developments were nearly 100 per cent occupied and had long waiting lists.

Straus drew attention to pending amendments to the USHA Act which will provide "sufficient funds to take 2,000,000 people out of the slums and rehouse them in decent sanitary homes."

The measure, he said, passed the Senate by a 2-to-1 vote and is awaiting House action.

'Poison Breakfast' Kills Two Chinese

fish, chopped for cooking in Chinese style, and prepared to have breakfast, regularly served about 1 a. m., with their relatives.

Lee Ling, he said, mixed the fish with imported rice flour, rolled the mixture into balls and fried them. He also prepared an Oriental green vegetable whose Occidental equivalent he was unable to identify. Both he and Lee Bee explained the meal was not one served to patrons of the restaurant. The name of the dish was the Chinese equivalent of "In the Winter."

After eating, the six sat around the table talking until all but Lee Ling and Lee Fay became ill. Lee Bee was given a home remedy mixed in the kitchen by Beatrice Thompson, colored waitress, and soon recovered. The Silver Spring trio left for home.

Yesterday afternoon, Lee Ling died in agony. At almost the same moment, Lee Fay was found dead in his bed in Silver Spring.

Dr. A. Magruder MacDonald, District coroner, will perform an autopsy today on Lee Ling. Lee Fay was pronounced dead by Dr. Willard P. McNeill, of Silver Spring, who called Dr. C. E. Hawks, medical examiner of Montgomery County. Dr. Hawks said he would withhold a certificate of death pending the autopsy.

The four survivors said they believed Lee Ling might have mixed insect powder with the chopped fish instead of rice flour. They told police an open box of poison was discovered near the flour.

like for it to be better than this one."

She looked around the little four-room cottage on the canal bank where her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Albert Redmon, have lived for four years. Louise and Joe have rented a room at another house, down the road, at 4930 Canal road, but they eat some of their meals with the Redmons. Her father also is a WPA painter, she said.

"Oh, yes, I've stopped playing with dolls," she said with 13-year-old dignity. "But I still have my dolls, 14 of them—and one of them is 9 years old," she added, as she ran into the next room to get it.

She and Geesling got their marriage license in Fairfax County and were married at the home of a minister—she didn't remember the name—near Vienna, Va., October 12. She said her husband's sister, Mrs. Lillian Jacobs, went with them. Her parents didn't learn of the elopment until later. But she had known Geesling for a year and her parents must have suspected a romance, she said.

"I gave my age as 21 when we got the license," she said. "I've always looked older than my age. That's one reason why I didn't like school. The children used to make fun of me for looking older than the others in my grade." She will be 14 April 23.

Until just before her marriage, she went to Weightman School, where she was in a special class "because of my eyesight," she said.

Her sister, Evelyn, who is nearly 15, listened as the younger girl went on talking blandly about married life.

After staying with her parents for a while, she and her husband were with his mother in Berwyn, Md., for two months. Now she is getting a taste of housekeeping, cooking his breakfasts, sewing on buttons—"but I haven't learned to darn socks yet."

Geesling, she said, was formerly in the Army, but she protested that she "didn't fall for his uniform." He is a brother of Martha Geesling, crippled patient at Emergency Hospital.

Roosevelt, Tired of Grand Wisecracks, Says He Won't Be Smoked Out on 3d Term

Further, he said, cold figures would not indicate that everyone is doing so badly who is in business.

Laughlin Currie, the President's fiscal "anonymous" assistant, who compiled the table from which Mr. Roosevelt read, appended a note which said the figures were of such a nature that generous use could be made of them.

National income jumped 71 per cent from 40 billion dollars in 1932 to 68 billions in 1939, reported the President. He said that if an 80-billion income could be attained and sustained for a year the Federal Treasury would have a balanced budget. He asserted Government debt was no higher today than in 1932 because State, county and local debt had been proportionately reduced.

Tired of Third Term Talk

But before elaborating on the reasons for the rise in national income, Mr. Roosevelt rather flatly suggested to reporters they might as well stop asking him third-term questions—that he had enjoyed a long exchange of very grand wise cracks on the subject, but that after all a willing horse can be driven to death. Inquiries about third-term indorsements in Pennsylvania and Illinois prompted the lecture.

Presidential statistics on the New Deal's contribution to national recovery follow:

Wages and salaries $3,880,000,000 in the month of December, 1939, as against $2,403,000,000 the same month of 1932, an increase of 62 per cent.

Factory pay rolls $197,000,000 in the calendar year of 1939 as against $80,000,000 in 1932.

Cash farm income up 82 per cent, showing $8,519,000,000 last year compared to $4,682,000,000. Included in the 1939 figure is $807,000,000 in benefit payments.

Dividends received up 55 per cent—$4,253,000,000 as against $2,745,000,000.

Exports Nearly Doubled

Exports increased by 97 per cent, $3,179,000,000 compared to $1,611,000,000. (Mr. Roosevelt said opponents of the reciprocal trade policy would find it hard to get around these figures.)

No agricultural employment (all forms of service, small store owners, transportation, etc.) up 28 per cent with 34,940,000 people receiving income in 1939 against 27,245,000 people in 1932—this exclusive of 3,000,000 on relief rolls.

Federal Reserve Board index for all production: 105 in 1939; 64 in 1932.

Only interest received by individuals sagged in the seven years, being 9 per cent less last year than in 1932, the President reported.

However, the Chief Executive promptly pointed out that first interest rates had gone down, enabling people to get cheaper money, and second, total private debt had been reduced.

Reporters asked for an amplification when the President said Government debt today was no greater than in 1932.

Local, State, county and city debt, he replied, had gone down the full extent that Federal debt has risen and in the meantime private debt has fallen off. Therefore, reasoned Mr. Roosevelt, the total debt has done down.

In so far as balancing the budget is concerned, the President put it approximately as follows:

If we can get national income up to 80 billion dollars by putting as many people to work as possible, Federal relief expenditures necessarily would go down. Government income would go up and tax rates would remain at their present level. There seems no question at all but what if the country can get up to an 80 billion income we would have a little better than a balanced budget, he said.

Fears New Recession

Here, the President took a thrust at Republicans and conservative Democrats who have been demanding major economies in government.

A lot of people don't want to strive for a balanced budget his way, said Mr. Roosevelt, and are demanding drastic cuts in Federal expenditures.

He warned that if this course were adopted there might be a repetition of the marked recession that began in the fall of 1937 and ran until the spring of 1939 because the Administration mistakenly cut expenditures too drastically and too fast.

The President declined to venture a "peep into the future" as to what 1940 holds in store. Nobody knows, he said, because there are too many coefficients in the present situation, internationally.

but said he would not "bid against a ridiculous figure." He let the original $125,000 bid of Albert M. Greenfield, of the All-Philadelphia Citizens Committee, go unchallenged. When Senator Guffey, of Pennsylvania, raised this to $150,000 over-all, he shouted he would meet it.

"Chicago can do more for the party than any city in the country," asserted Kelly. "It is a stimulating point. It is going to be a pivotal State. It is the center of the country and is easy to reach. We have accommodations for everybody and no hotel rates will be raised."

The decision to "outwait" the Republicans on convention date and assure a Democratic glimpse of Republican platform and candidates before convening, drew a bitter rejoinder from Chairman Hamilton of the Republican National Committee.

"What a spectacle the country today has witnessed," Hamilton said in a mimeographed statement. "Here is a party that has been in power for seven and one-half years and yet it apparently does not know its own mind. It must wait to ascertain what the minority party proposes to do before it can even decide when to hold its national convention."

Paraphrasing a recent speech by Attorney General Jackson, Hamilton asked if Democrats "are openly afraid to take the lead?" He said action at the Republican committee meeting next week "will be decisive and our program will be positive and affirmative."

After the Democrats had voted Farley power to name the day and vested a subcommittee with authority to choose a permanent chairman and keynoter and make other convention arrangements, Mayor Hague said New Jersey Democrats want a "late" convention, preferably in September, adding: "The shorter the campaign the better for us."

Farley replied he would name "a time satisfactory to all members of the committee and in the interest of the Democratic Party." His announcement will come shortly after the Republican February 16 decision. Committeemen privately were assured the convention will be one to two weeks after the Republicans convene.

Garner Praises Farley

Both Kelly and Hague, ardent third-term pluggers, avoided any reference to that issue on the floor and when Edward J. Flynn offered a resolution extolling the President he likewise skirted the third-term question. Adopted by a rising vote, the resolution praised Roosevelt's work for "his country, his party and for all humanity." It called him "a truly great President," termed him "our chief" and said he was confronted with "the same gales of abuse" that faced President Jackson.

Vice President Garner, as active for the nomination in his own behalf as the President is silent, sat on the speakers' platform, near Farley. Garner, as committee vice chairman, twice introduced other speakers but made no speech as such.

Presenting Farley, Garner called him "one of the most distinguished and one of the most efficient chairmen of any party in the last half century." He said Farley "is one of the most agreeable fellows to work with I have ever known." Garner later introduced Mrs. Lucretia del Valle Grady to present a resolution commending Farley's "unparalleled leadership," which was adopted.

Farley Returns Compliment

Farley returned the Garner compliments, referring to him in his speech as "sturdy, stalwart John Nance Garner." Again Farley invited Garner to address the meeting, but the Vice President merely rose for applause and a bow.

Before going home, the committeemen will call at the White House at 11 a. m. this morning to shake hands with the President. Farley stressed that the President was "anxious to see each individual member of the committee.

Farley, in his speech, lauded the Administration record, urged party harmony and called on committeemen to prevent "any interruption of the program which has kept our country at peace amid a world at war."

He aimed the usual sharp shafts at the Republican opposition, said it was financed by "bottomless moneybags," but declared he had no doubt the Democrats will triumph in November because "you cannot beat anybody with nobody" and "you cannot beat any program with no program."

Cautions Against Split

Farley said 10,000,000 voters will cast their ballots for the best candidates and the best program, cautioning: "It must be our job to so conduct our campaign that these independent voters will adhere to the allegiance they gave in 1932 and 1936. Nothing would so tend to make them waver as the spectacel of a shattered Democratic front."

While saying the committee would remain aloof from the preliminary battle, he said "the greater the enthusiasm that can be aroused for these varying candidates, the greater the good to the Democratic Party." He said the campaign should not become "so bitter that the rivalries will hold over beyond the period when our coming convention gives us a ticket."

Balkan Disunity

Despite the brave promise to maintain a "common vigil" to protect the independence and territorial integrity of states adhering to the Balkan Entente, the Belgrade meeting of this group produced few constructive results.

Rumania, Greece, Turkey and Yugoslavia are perhaps in no greater jeopardy than they were before their respective foreign ministers met in the Yugoslav capital late last week. They are not less endangered, however. With the exception of Turkey, which is bound to Great Britain and France by a military alliance, each of the Balkan nations must continue to depend very largely on itself alone for protection against any and all foes that might threaten its existence. Rumania is especially threatened.

Rumania today finds herself precariously poised between Russia, which may at any moment pounce on Bessarabia, and Germany, which has been steadily increasing her pressure on the Balkan kingdom to increase shipments of oil and grain to the Third Reich. Rumania cannot successfully resist that pressure without considerable aid. But it was soon apparent at the Belgrade conference that her partners of the Balkan Entente are not prepared to give her that necessary aid.

To be sure, Rumania has a guarantee of support from the Allies. But that guarantee has little value unless a modus vivendi could somehow be achieved between Carol's kingdom and Bulgaria which bars the way against any overland aid to Rumania. At the same time the Allies, in return for their guarantee, are demanding that the Bucharest government reduce its sales of oil to Germany.

Rumania is thus between the devil and the deep blue sea. She is in no position successfully to defend herself against either Russia or Germany, let alone both of them in combination. She has only the paper guarantee of Great Britain and France and the platonic support of her fellow members of the Balkan Entente. For this reason the report that King Carol might make a deal with Germany, whereby Rumania would be given some protection against Russian aggression in return for large-scale economic concessions to the Third Reich, cannot safely be discounted.

If there is unity in strength there is, by the same token, weakness in disunity. And, despite the extension of the Balkan Entente for an additional seven years, there appears to be a real lack of unity in the Balkans.

The Tables Turned

It is a strange reversal of the usual method of procedure for representatives of organized labor to urge the Government to make peace with industry and instill "confidence in the permanence of the rules and regulations under which business can operate."

The appeal comes from a group of labor leaders connected with the organized building trades which are now under fire. That fact may help to explain the sharpness of the attack upon Administration policies. But it does not detract from the significance of the labor leaders' assumption that prosperity for the workers is dependent upon the prosperity of private industry.

That was likewise the gist of the message delivered by President Green of the A. F. of L. in a recent Miami address. He, too, urged the Government to give business "the green light" after complaining that businessmen have no assurance for the future. "That assurance," he said, "must be forthcoming quickly in the public interest and for the sake of millions who are now suffering because there are not enough jobs to go around."

In utterances of this nature one detects not only disbelief in the possibility of solving our economic problems solely through governmental intervention, but also an underlying fear of the trend toward increasing State control. Spokesmen for the A. F. of L. are at last awake to the fact that "tinkering with the hours and wages of labor," and "tinkering with the cost of labor's food" may end in a form of control that would destroy labor's freedom to organize and bargain for itself.

This A. F. of L. group also calls attention to "what has happened to labor and industry in those lands where all powers have been concentrated in the central authority." Mr. Green likewise draws a contrast between the enslavement of totalitarian states and the conditions prevailing in the United States in connection with his appeal for a democratic approach to solution of our economic problems. His conclusion that to make democracy work "we must have more unity of thought and unity of action" is an implied warning against policies that set class against class and presuppose a basic conflict of interest between capital and labor.

Desirable Amendments

The District's unemployment compensation fund now exceeds $16,000,000. Moreover, it is increasing at a very rapid rate because the 3 per cent pay roll levy imposed on employers under the local Unemployment Compensation Act yields many times the amount of money currently paid out in benefits to insured workers.

During the fiscal year 1939, for example, District unemployment benefits amounted to $1,700,000, while collections from employers totaled $6,760,000. Up to the end of last June unemployment benefits amounted to less than 16 per cent of the sums collected from employers, plus interest on accumulations.

Only five States besides the District have accumulated unemployment reserve funds twice as large as they were when benefit payments first began. And all of these States have a lower employer contribution than the District. This contribution amounts to 2.7 per cent in all but a few of the States. That rate is the equivalent of the 90 per cent credit allowed by the Federal Government as an offset to the 3 per cent Federal pay roll tax imposed upon employers of 8 or more persons.

The District tax, however, amounts to 3 per cent and is imposed upon all employers of one or more persons. Since the credit allowed by the Federal Government is only partial, it follows that District employers subject to the 3 per cent Federal levy actually pay more than 3 per cent to meet the combined demands of the two governments.

With employers contributing many times the amounts needed to make the local system of unemployment insurance financially sound, amendments to the District Unemployment Compensation Law to reduce the pay roll levies are certainly justified. Under the McGehee bill, now before the House District Committee, the rate would be placed at 2.7 per cent, while the tax would be computed only on wages and salaries up to $3,000 instead of on the entire pay roll, as at present. These proposed changes would not favor District employers; they would simply bring the local levies into line with those imposed by most of the States.

Obviously such limited reductions in taxes would still leave a wide margin between the income and outgo of the District unemployment insurance fund. Hence the McGehee bill also provides for a liberalization of benefits payable to insured workers. It would raise maximum weekly payments from $15 to $20 and increase the maximum number of weeks for which benefits may be paid.

In addition the waiting period preceding payment of benefits would be shortened. If these recommended changes are approved, the District will have one of the most generous systems of unemployment insurance in the country.

Unlike many of the States, the District fortunately does not have to choose between a reduction of pay roll taxes or a liberalization of benefits. With its excessively large reserve—the result of relatively stable employment conditions in this area—it may safely reduce the unemployment pay roll taxes and simultaneously increase benefits, leaving an ample margin to cover future contingencies.

That being the case, support for the McGehee bill should be forthcoming not only from business interests seeking relief from the heavy burden of taxes, but also from the workers who will benefit from the more generous scale of benefits carried by the bill.

Literary Piracy

Year after year the Senate, which actually passed the copyright treaty five years ago, has delayed final ratification at the instance of certain groups which have asked for an opportunity to get together upon appropriate domestic legislation.

That they have not yet agreed upon such legislation is evident, and until they do so, or until Congress is willing to do its own thinking on the subject, the chances of reforming the national copyright law are exceedingly slim. It is questionable whether the groups representing users of copyrighted material have any real desire for better protection of authors' rights. That they will ever agree with the authors upon recommendations to Congress is even more doubtful.

There is not and has never been any real reason for legislation in advance of adhering to the treaty. The object of the treaty is to put an end to the unauthorized use of authors' works in other countries. That object can be achieved and reciprocal protection granted here without waiting for domestic legislation to be drafted and enacted.

American authors need protection against piracy of their works abroad, and the American public needs protection against piratical, hence irresponsible and inferior, presentation of American cultural achievements. But the one great objective that should be sought now is definitive Senatorial approval of the treaty. We can then pass on to the attainment of other ends.

The Vacant Judgeship

Because of President Roosevelt's well known interest in expediting the administration of justice, it is reasonable to assume that he will soon fill the vacancy in the District Court. Another judge on the local bench is urgently needed to eliminate delays which, in many instances, amount to a denial of justice.

The question before the President is not, however, merely the filling of a judicial vacancy. Courts do not function automatically. Their effectiveness in disposing of cases depends almost entirely upon the capacity and experience of the men appointed to the bench. The selection of a judge who is not familiar with the rules of the local court, with District law or with the members of the local bar would contribute very little to clearing congested dookets.

In the States it is a well established custom to appoint to the Federal courts men who are acquainted with the problems of the region they will serve. That is a sound policy. In Washington it is even more important to elevate local attorneys to the bench, for the Federal court which serves this city is the only one of its kind in the United States. Its rules frequently vary from the rules in effect in other Federal courts. In addition to national cases, the court must handle a great number of civil suits and criminal charges that would go to county or city courts in any other jurisdiction.

Obviously, then, no lawyer from outside of Washington could serve on the District bench with the efficiency which the congested status of the calendar demands. Thanks to the good work of District Attorney Pine, the criminal docket is now current. But when the court began its work in October its docket of civil cases was 20 months in arrears. Some improvement has been made since that time, but the prospect of injustice through long delays will continue to weigh heavily upon the court unless a competent jurist familiar with local procedure is named to the bench.

Six of the eleven judges now on the District bench were chosen from other jurisdictions. If a member of the District bar is named to succeed the late Judge Cox, only half of the judges will be Washington men. Approximately 90 per cent of the cases tried by the court are local in character. Even if the question of efficiency did not arise, it would be difficult, under these circumstances, to justify the nomination of an outside lawyer to this post. Justice should begin with the appointment of judges whom the people know.

But the element of efficiency cannot be ignored. With the court still far behind in its work, the appointment of a judge who would require a year to familiarize himself with the District's unique statutes and rules of procedure would be a cruel blow to the cause of judicial reform.

The Will To Believe

A cable from Istanbul indicates that the wily Dr. Goebbels has launched against the hapless Turks a propaganda offensive that surpasses in subtlety all his previous exploits. Nazi agents, it seems, are now spreading reports through the countryside that Premier Ismet Inonu has the evil eye.

To make this calumny more plausible it is pointed out that just before the recent earthquakes the premier paid a visit to the now devastated regions. Ergo, whisper the agents, the earthquakes must have been the judgment of Allah on a government that had the impiety to throw its stake with the Allies instead of with the Germans.

How far, if at all, Dr. Goebbels can succeed by these methods in undermining Turkish morale we shall presently know. Obviously, he considers the Turks a pretty ignorant and superstitious lot. It is possible that Dr. Goebbels' success in persuading his own people to gulp down any number of outrageous absurdities and palpable contradictions has deceived him about how much non-Nordic peoples can be induced to swallow.

This newest form of frightfulness, and the measures the Turkish government may devise to counteract it, deserve the earnest attention of those in charge of our own national defense. We may feel well enough protected from assault by land or sea or air, but when it comes to superstition every nation—and certainly our own, as was abundantly proved by Orson Welles' imaginary invasion from Mars in October, 1938—must be on guard against surprise attacks.

Doubtless our gallant strategists are now prepared for such contingencies. For instance, an enemy-inspired broadcast about another Martian invasion need cause us no consternation. Instead of vainly trying to refute so preposterous a yarn, we would merely follow it by an equally convincing broadcast, telling how Miss Dorothy Lamour and Mr. Tyrone Power had gone out hand-in-hand to confront the invaders and how the Martians had trampled one another to death in the stampede for autographs.

Milk Prices

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The Department of Agriculture has versatility. Mr. Wallace sets up a monopoly for the milk farmers and distributors and the distributors immediately hike the price to the consumer, not forgetting, of course, to make that hike more than their increase to the farmers. This makes the consumer mad so Mr. Montgomery, of Mr. Wallace's department, comes out with an attack on the distributors for merely taking advantage of a set-up which Mr. Wallace provided.

The local farmer kids himself into believing that he is better off by reason of the increase, but forgets that, under the classified price plan, which Mr. Wallace supports, the proportion of his milk going into lower price brackets will wipe out his increase in the higher brackets. The distributor, to insure that the local farmer will get a smaller gross, begins to interest the people in a processed milk made of dried milk and butter fat shipped in from cheaper producing centers. The poor will get the surplus—a surplus which will be increased by the sale of processed milk from an imported supply.

Result: The poor remain poor; the distributors get more profits; the milk farmer will get a smaller gross; Mr. Wallace has been vindicated by Mr. Montgomery, and the consumer pays more.

The National Symphony Controversy

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: In the controversy raging over the orchestra, it seems to me the entire point is missed. Some years ago the people of Washington, feeling the urge to provide some music for the city, and to help out unemployed musicians who at that time seemed to want help, banded together to raise money in order to support an orchestra.

Who was it who raised the money? The musicians? No. They have been very indifferent to the raising of the money ever since the first season. It was the music lovers who have worked untiringly to raise funds year after year that the orchestra might go on, in spite of the members of the orchestra.

The one point they had to sell to the people of Washington, and to the loyal contributors, was an orchestra that was improving under the direction of Hans Kindler. In other words, it was because of his connection with the orchestra, and the enthusiasm he was able to pass on to the campaign workers, that any money was raised at all.

That is a fact. Eliminate Dr. Kindler and there are not two conductors in the world today that could inspire enough enthusiasm among the contributors to enable the workers to raise the campaign fund necessary. His name alone is responsible for 60 per cent of the campaign each year. No other conductors, except possibly Toscanini or Stokowski, could come within 30 per cent of raising the fund Dr Kindler has raised.

The musicians do not appreciate [illegible] they have in Dr. Kindler. And the musicians' union resents his success. Therein lies the answer to the whole controversy. Most of the members of the orchestra are young and have not worked under other great conductors and so do not know the qualities a great conductor must of necessity possess.

If the musicians do not believe this, and of course they do not, let the raise a sustaining fund themselves. Let them consider this a challenge. They have forgotten that the Symphony Association is not a business in the sense that it must continue to operate. It is money in the pockets of the contributors if it does not go on.

Don't the men realize that these same contributors could bring the Philadelphia Orchestra to Washington 20 times for what it costs to give them employment for a single season? And if they cannot have a good orchestra, one that continues to improve, that is exactly what will be done. FOR GOOD MUSIC.

Washington, Feb. 3.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I have read Benjamin Duck's very interesting and very illuminating letters to The Washington Post. Illuminating because, as a contributor, I hadn't realized that I had agreed to hire an orchestra for a year. Suppose I want to give a dance next Saturday night and contact an orchestra that is out of work and is looking for something to do. If this orchestra takes Mr. Duck's attitude it will probably demand that I pay it for a whole month, because it hasn't any other prospects at the time. I must say that if that is the basis upon which I must hire my orchestra, I'll go to a movie next Saturday night.

I cannot understand such an attitude. People of Washington are giving their hard-earned money in order that we might hear our own orchestra play less than 30 times. It is for those 30 performances that we give our money—nothing else. We did stretch a point and went out in the country and obtained contracts to play in other cities, because we wanted to give the men more. And the men don't like it. Such gratitude.

They are offered this year a 9 per cent increase and they want 30 per cent. Give them this 30 per cent and next year they will want 30 per cent more. There is no stopping. The only solution is to quit and if the men want to work let them raise the money and get their own engagements. We do not deny them that right.

Through all of this controversy the fact remains that the men are working only because the people of Washington are generous. We give far more than we receive in return. If a man is hungry and asks for work, and 30 days work is all you have for him to do, why should you pay him for a year? It doesn't make sense. If they don't want the money we know we can give, then let's give it where it will be appreciated. The people of Finland could use it to better advantage.

DISGUSTED CONTRIBUTOR.

Washington, Feb. 3.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I am neither a supporting donor of the National Symphony Orchestra nor a union musician—merely one of those who pays his dollars to pass through the turnstiles and hear the concerts. But I have to work all year in order to be able to do so.

It is a very illogical argument set forth by Mr. Benjamin Duck when he says that the musicians cannot live on $26 per week—a figure he computes by dividing the salary received in a short season by the total number of weeks in a year. Yes, let them sell vacuum cleaners (as Mr. Duck mentions) or get into some other line of work out of season. That's what our professional football players do. Will the union musicians expect to receive sufficient compensation during a few weeks season to support them in idleness or laziness the balance of the year?

Accidental Shooting

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Through a period of some 15 years of observation it has seemed to me that Washington has a disproportionately large number of tragedies such as was reported in The Washington Post last week—the fatal shooting of one child by another who got hold of a gun that "wasn't loaded."

These tragedies make front-page news for a day, readers sorrowfully shake their heads for a moment lamenting that "such things must be," and the victim's family is left in the stark reality that the light of their lives is dimmed if not extinguished. The next day, and the next and the next that pernicious species of human nit-wit that leaves loaded guns around where children can pick them up, will continue this practice of criminal carelessness. And parents who permit their children to point guns—any gun, whether toy or imitation—at any person without immediate and drastic discipline, will keep on doing their part to insure that such tragedies are repeated. Another innocent life will have been sacrificed in vain.

Can't something more be done than merely print the newspaper record of these tragedies after they happen—and continue to happen every few weeks? Is the teaching of the proper use, and the dangers of the misuse, of guns still another educational function that the public schools must take over from incompetent or indifferent parents?

Or might the American Legion not include in its Americanization program some strong emphasis on the No. 1 and No. 2 rules of safe handling of firearms—never to point a gun at any person you do not intend and expect to shoot; never to load one until you are ready to use it and remove the load immediately after the occasion for use is past. Perhaps it would be worth a trial. At any rate, these recurrent tragedies ought to evoke some response other than futile regrets. FREEMAN WEISS.

Threat To Free Speech

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Isn't it an ominous sign that civil liberties in this country are being attacked by the Administration? Usually, civil liberties are done away with when a country goes to war; but here we are, not at war with any other nation, and already the Government is cracking down on those who are speaking out against our involvement in foreign wars.

From the way the Government is persecuting Communist leaders who have been very outspoken in denouncing American loans to Finland, and exposing the plans of the so-called democracies to broaden the theater of war by a joint attack against Soviet Russia, it would seem that the Roosevelt Administration is anxious to silence that voice.

Do not the people of Washington agree that to maintain our democracy, we must guard against these attacks by the Government on our civil rights? Do not the people of Washington agree that to register our opposition to American involvement in the second world war, we must maintain freedom of the press, speech and assembly for those who also oppose the war?

The Old House Creaks

We live on the top floor of an old house and we're happy there—except on windy midwinter nights. Then our apartment is fit only for a setting for some cozy domestic drama like "The Cat and the Canary" or "The Bat." Then the antics that the house stages make me forget our flat has two fireplaces that always draw, spacious rooms, and wide-board floors. In fact, the floors are part of the trouble.

The usual noises of an ageing house don't bother me. Old timbers shudder without making me lift my head from my book. Boards creak without suggesting a stealthy foot to my ordinarily active imagination. Windows can rattle vigorously without disturbing me unless they happen to wake my small son.

Then I go to quiet him, and find him staring wide-eyed at the dark panes. That is always a little disquieting. He seems so sure that something is out there, something to frighten even a brash toddler who has never heard the word "fear." I pick him up and carry him over to look out with me at the snowy rooftops and so reassure him—and myself.

At such times I'm glad we haven't a dog. I remember the white pit bulldog we had until I was ten. Often when we children would be contentedly reading or drawing or cutting out paper dolls of an evening, our dog watching sleepily, he would suddenly leave us to walk slowly to the door of a dark room, growling softly, his hackles rising at something lurking in the blackness. I can see his white silhouette now, pointing at the door of an empty room.

None of us would move until Dad got up, went in and turned on the light to show Jack there was nothing there. Then our dog would come trotting back to us, and we would resume our games, but the bloom was off our contentment.

Jack would find plenty to raise his hackles when the wind is blowing around this house. Doors are always swinging slowly open. Indeed, the dining-room door will do it when there isn't a breath of a breeze. Then it's a matter of treading on a certain board: Creak, and the door opens gently toward me, and beyond is a dark hall. That really should go very well in the movies, and the knowledge that the old latch isn't mechanically perfect doesn't spoil the effect.

The tall double doors to the hall closet give an even more stirring performance. When the dining-room door opens without benefit of board, I can say, "Ah, a draft," and hunt the malefactor down. But a windowless closet shouldn't have a draft. Nevertheless, on windy nights, those double doors open outward, in perfect unison and without a creak, just as though someone with a hand on each door were pushing them gently open.

Never have I seen that trick pulled in the daytime. The house reserves it for the midnight show. Then the doors swing out, and always I stalk bravely over to shut them firmly. I know there must be an opening of some sort high in the ceiling of that lofty closet. I have not been able to spot it by daylight. I don't stop or look for it at night. But I know it must be there, though only the wind can find it.

There are minor disturbances. Because the heating system was installed long after the old house was built, pipes wind intricately up near the ceilings. They give off noises easily accounted for if I happen to be in the same room. From a distance, the sounds are puzzling.

Then, too, when anyone closes the street door downstairs, the draft makes the knocker on our third floor door tap lightly. I have been fooled into answering it twice in one evening to find no one on our doorstep, no one at all.

But it is the phantom windmill that I dislike most. It turns and squeaks only on blowy nights, making a ghostly racket outside the bedroom window. There is, of course, no windmill in this block, hard by Lafayette Square. The notion is fantastic, but it sounds like nothing else. It's not only annoying, it's anachronistic.

Why should a Middle Western windmill—its noise is exactly that of the metal contrivances that dot the plains of Illinois and Iowa—haunt this neighborhood of an earlier day? But there it turns through the long night, hauling up water for dear life.

We have a rational explanation for that, too. It must, we say, be the ventilator on the roof of the building next door. I have not inquired about that ventilator. I don't want to know definitely that the building is equipped with nothing of the sort.

Among the gadgets on that roof, I haven't from our window been able to identify the offender. It has never been heard by day. Or on a summer night. Only on cold, windy nights does that peculiar ventilator choose to run. But we still assert loudly when we hear that mournful clatter and squeak, "It's the ventilator."

Sometimes, when doors open again and again with quiet persistence, and boards squeak and the knocker taps under a ghostly hand, I think the old house is overrun with a restless brood, every man-jack of them just up from a place that's hot even in midwinter. So they're thirsty—thirsty enough to need every drop of water that crazy windmill draws up by the hogshead!

Fair Enough

A Bad Case Of Smarts

SOMEONE SHOULD come out with a fearless declaration that there is altogether too much education in the United States, but I will not be the patsy, because the one who does will be assaulted by a dozen universities, normal schools and A. and M.'s, a brick at a time, and I am still mending my hide where I recently caught the mash notes of the Rev. Charles E. Coughlin's love lobby. I may say, incidentally, that although I received many letters beginning "Dear Sir: You cur," in the era of wonderful nonsense and the million-dollar gate, nothing in my previous experience equaled this pouring of the Christian spirit in volume of vituperative power. However, to anyone who is reckless enough to state this proposition, I offer some suggestions, the first being that although the American people are, at a rough estimate, ten times as educated today as they were in 1900, they are also ten times as miserable, or, anyway, think they are, which amounts to the same thing. College education, like oranges, evening clothes and vacations with pay, was a rarity then, and the young man or woman who went away to school was given a notice in the home-town papers and shunned thereafter by his or her old playmates as one who was somehow queer. The national standard of dumbness was up around 83, and it may be observed that those who speak so longingly of the opportunities which existed 40 years ago and before ignore the fact that most of the opportunities were seized and improved by persons who were thoroughly uneducated.

Learning Increases, Happiness Decreases

EDUCATION BEGAN to sweep the land in the first decade of this century, and as learning has risen higher and higher the happiness of the people has declined, which may mean that ignorance really is bliss, after all. At the same time, the divorce rate has risen amazingly, indicating that this convenience, which was expected to make for harmony, has not paid out in results, if the present dissatisfaction with American life is considered.

Entertainment and travel, too, are commonplace now by contrast with an easily remembered day when a magic lantern or Tom show was a gala event in the hard but generally sufficient line of the American small town, when city people saw a stock company production two or three times a year and the next town or Coney Island was a long way off.

If people were miserable then they were too dumb to know it, and certainly they had every right to feel miserable on their low wages for long hours and with no prospect of pension or job security. And if the same conditions prevailed today the same pay, hours and conditions for the regularly employed and the lack of comforts and luxuries, the enlightened, educated race of Americans would either collapse from self-pity or commit revolution against themselves. It is a good thing they got the hard work done before they got educated. Otherwise, it never would have been done.

Age Limit Of Youth Raised To 25 Years

PRESENT PLANS for the care, feeding and education of youth have raised the age limit of youth to 25 years. Of course it is true that a scholar never ceases to be a student, but there is no process of selection, and none seems to be possible under the American system if this assistance is to be a public service. The numskull has the same right as the genius to keep himself aloof from the practical job of life, and in a rough way, this means that 25 is to be the economic age of consent. If that be the case, and if men and women are middle-aged and barely employable at 40, and all through at 50, it seems scarcely worth the bother to fetch up any more Americans. There aren't enough man-hours in a man in 15 years of work at the 40-hour or 30-hour week, and 10 years more at reduced speed, to lay up enough credit to carry his get on the public rolls to the age of 25 and to provide for the retirement of himself and wife.

The cost of production, taking the problem as a whole, is so vast that the country might ask itself whether it wouldn't be better to spend the money for groceries, and the quality of this education has been severely criticized by many of the educators themselves. The Americans are, per capita, 34 both costs and examination marks, the most educated people on earth, but they were never so complaining and discontented in the history of the country. Looking at the figures in the tables, my explanation is that we are suffering from a very bad case of the smarts.

Today And Tomorrow

By Walter Lippmann

Time Out And Good Luck

THERE ARE some 500 men in Washington today who at the end of this year must either retire, at least temporarily, to private life or make sure that they or their superiors are re-elected. There are the 435 members of the House; there are 34 Senators; there are the heads of the executive departments and independent agencies plus their important policy-making subordinates. Many of the Congressmen, of course, have safe districts and are practically certain of re-election; but even they have much at stake depending on whether they are to be in the majority or the minority in the next Congress. Five hundred is a rough figure but it is a conservative figure. These 500 men control the policies of the United States and they will supply such leadership as the American people are going to get during the year 1940.

On present indications they are not going to supply any leadership in 1940. Perhaps they cannot help it. For they believe that they are not in a position to think single-mindedly or to talk plainly about what they believe to be right and wrong in public affairs. They believe that they have to arrange their opinions to fit their current estimate of what the undecided voters will be liking in the period between June and November. This is not easy to guess. But the safe thing to do is to promise desirable results that cannot be brought to a showdown before election, to oppose whatever measures are strongly opposed by a part of the electorate rather than to support measures which are weakly favored by another part of the electorate, and on the whole to deal in generalities and slogans rather than in specific measures which are controversial.

Prospect Is Alarming During Campaign

ANYONE WHO has not forgotten the election years of 1920 and 1932, which also happened to fall in a time when events were critical, will have learned that the morale of the politicians and the mood of the electorate in a campaign year is artificial and passing. The American democracy works better than an outside observer would think if he sees it only in such a year as this. As soon as the struggle for office is over and the preoccupation with vote-getting subsides, public men do begin again to think about the realities and the people do again respond to leadership. But while the campaign is on, especially in a period of dangerous disorder, the prospect is alarming. For it does seem like taking inordinate risks to have to pass through the year 1940 without firm and coherent leadership, without serious discussion of the genuine issues, and with responsible men preoccupied by partisan politics. It seems like driving blindfolded on an icy road.

As a matter of fact, it is like that. And if the Lord had not been very good to us in the past, we should not dare to run the risk. For the only policy we have just now is the hope that nothing so irreparable will happen in the next months that we cannot deal with the consequences when at least we have passed through the political orgy and waked up from the intellectual coma which it causes.

Ship To Drift If Nothing Happens

WHETHER OR NOT we shall be able to let the ship of state drift for a year, is a question. But the 500 candidates in Washington are going to let the ship drift if nothing happens that changes their minds. They are not going to govern the United States in this year 1940. They are going to take time out to decide who is going to govern the United States after 1940. They are not going to deal with any thorny question that can be evaded. They are not going to think about any thorny question which, if answered honestly, would cause disturbing thoughts. They are not going to take preventive measures in 1940 to make less serious the problems that will confront them in 1941.

They are trusting their luck. They are trusting the fact that this country is big enough to stand a good deal of punishment. They are trusting the Atlantic Ocean. They are trusting that the Allies will win. They are trusting that the Chinese will hold on. They are trusting that something will happen to Hitler, Stalin, and the Japanese militarists. They are trusting that everybody else will be so tired when we wake up that all will be well.

Let us hope that they are not being too trusting.

Fighting Power of Infantry Increased, Maneuvers Show

Private Doakes Arrives Fresher Now, For a Truck Carries His Pack; Realism Is Keynote of Georgia War Games

By the Associated Press

Fort Benning, Ga., Feb. 5.—They've streamlined about everything except the human element in the modernized United States Army.

The mobility and fighting power of Private Joe Doakes has been multiplied by mechanization. Simplification of organizations, revamped drills and new style uniforms permit shorter training periods for recruits.

That is proved in winter maneuvers under way at the 97,000-acre Infantry School Reservation here and some 250 square miles of lands upon which the Army obtained "trespass rights."

How does the soldier of 1940 compare with the soldier of 1918? Officers still report, "It depends upon the man."

Packs Lightened

The 70-pound pack under which the doughboy marched in France is lightened now and carried aboard a truck. The 1940 Infantryman who walks to work has the advantage of arriving on the job fresher. But the hiking time of Infantry remains unchanged—two and a half miles an hour.

Technical experts create illusions to give effects of wartime conditions to the games which involve forces of more than 16,000 officers and men—the regular command of the Infantry School, the Army's First Division, concentrated here from northeastern forts, and most of the Nation's tank units.

Buried packages of TNT make a noisy but harmless substitute for shellfire and landmines. Guns shoot blanks in sham combat. Smoke bombs may be fired to form a backdrop for a unit simulating a movement theoretically only one phase of a large-scale offensive.

Illness Infrequent

Despite a relatively severe winter for this section—a season low of 12 degrees and a film of ice today—medical men said there was little illness.

The First Division, made up largely of men from New York and New England States, won a referees' decision over regular Infantry School units, recruited largely in the cotton belt, in the major activity of last week—48 hours of Blue vs. Red field work.

Observers decided the numerically superior First Division, the Blues led by Brig. Gen. Karl Truesdell, had a shade the best of a battle against the "Reds," commanded by Brig. Gen. Bruce Magruder, who were seeking to attack nearby Columbus, Ga.

Park Trees Cut To Ease Glasgow Coal Shortage

Copyright by New York Times

London, Feb. 5.—Officials in north England and Scotland eased the coal shortage yesterday by making Sunday deliveries of fuel, chopping down trees in parks to meet the demands of freezing citizens in Glasgow. The people lined up and watched the workers cut down trees and carried off the wood in barrels and on perambulators.

Traffic officials worked overtime clearing railroads and routing coal to centers where the shortage was most acute.

In many cases the shortage was greatest in the center of the coal fields. Glasgow, Manchester and Nottingham, all near large coal supplies, were hard hit because the local transportation system collapsed.

Officials have been most concerned about getting adequate supplies to the munitions factories. Some of the Yorkshire textile mills were said to be at a standstill. Already even some of the power plants are having trouble getting supplies.

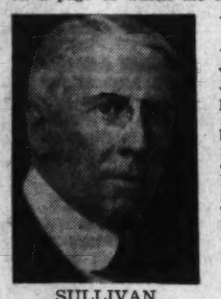
Hoover's Speeches

By Mark Sullivan

Magazine Corrects Error

HARPERS MAGAZINE in January printed something which is a landmark in journalism. It was printed more conspicuously than any of the regular articles—a single paragraph of italic type on a page of which the rest was white. It was entitled "An Apology to Mr. Hoover." It read:



SULLIVAN

"In the course of an article on ghost writing in the October issue . . . it was stated that former President Hoover practically never wrote a speech of his own. The fact is that Mr. Hoover's speeches have invariably been written by himself. We say this after opportunity for investigation both through original manuscripts and associates of Mr. Hoover who are in a position to speak authoritatively. We apologize to the former President and a great public servant for a most unfortunate error. We deeply regret it and gladly take this opportunity to rectify it now."

That apology—probably the most generously forthright that ever appeared in an American periodical—does credit to Harpers. An incorrect and damaging statement about any individual is a personal injustice. About a public man, it is a public detriment. A public man is more than a man, he is a symbol. And a democracy must function through its symbols, is dependent on symbols—is dependent on public men actually being what they seem to be, and hold themselves out to be. To destroy faith in symbols, without cause, is to make democracy more difficult to operate. This is in addition to the personal injustice involved.

Any Derogatory Statement Believed

THAT ANYONE should have written the original statement, "Mr. Hoover practically never wrote a speech of his own;" that magazine editors should have failed to check an assertion so bald—that is a depressing sign of the times. It illustrates how far the demeaning of Mr. Hoover, begun 10 years ago, has gone. This incident shows it reached such a point that the public, even the enlightened part, has been willing to give credence to almost any statement detrimental to Mr. Hoover.

For this readiness to accept derogation of Mr. Hoover, a primary cause was the campaign of demeaning which his opponents carried on. But that was effective only because of a condition of the public mind. We were miserable because of the depression. We wanted to find a concrete cause for it, a personal "devil." We were in no state of mind to discriminate among many causes—aftermath of the war, events abroad, and domestic policies, a score of abstract economic phenomena. Especially were we unwilling to admit that some, at least, of our suffering was due to our individual faults—our participation in the "get-rich-quick" spirit of the late 1920's, our overreaching and overspending, our share in the universal fatuous optimism.

For any careful stock-taking of causes, we were too angry. We just wanted something, some human being, to throw stones at. Even to ordinarily thoughtful persons, Mr. Hoover was the victim of a familiar psychological law of association. We suffered a disagreeable experience. At the time we suffered it, Mr. Hoover was President. Therefore——

The most understanding charity we can practice about the country's treatment of Mr. Hoover is to say that America was spiritually sick. And America will not be spiritually healthy again until it has purged itself of its false view of Mr. Hoover. To some degree this is taking place. Perhaps the full fruition of it may have to wait until the passing of the generation whose angry emotions were stirred. Possibly the adequate justification of Mr. Hoover may have to await the historians.

Depression Distorted National Viewpoint

OUR WHOLE national point-of-view about the depression, its causes, and the persons and classes associated with it, was distorted. Distortion of thinking about the facts of the depression led to distortion of thinking about its cure. Our minds were susceptible to fallacies, "white rabbits," which in normal conditions we would have passed off with a smile at human credulity. Entertainment of those fallacies has cost us dear in money, time and national morale. We have added 25 billions in national debt, we have lost years in which we might have made the firm beginnings of true recovery. We are now reaching the point where the fallacies are recognized as having failed.

Not among the major fallacies of the day, yet a practice too general, is reliance of public men on "ghost-writing." Any person having many speeches to make must make use of assistance for research and compilation of facts. But the line is easy to draw between that and "ghost-writing"—which essentially consists of a man uttering as his own that which is not his own. Public men should refrain from it, out of regard for their own intellectual integrity, and for simple truth in their relations with the public. Even if a man has high quality within himself, his reputation is diluted if he depends on others for some of his speeches, or material portions of them. Any speech that makes history, such as Lincoln's Gettysburg Address, must express directly and completely the heart of the speaker. No one would dream of Senator Borah delivering a speech that was not completely his own, nor Woodrow Wilson.

Baltimore, Feb. 5 (AP).—Lack of adequate water supply at Grahamtown, small community in Allegany County, will be discussed tomorrow at a public service commission hearing in Frostburg, a few miles from Grahamtown.

Frostburg city officers and officers of the Frostburg-Grahamtown Water Co. and the Frostburg Water Co. have been invited to attend. The commission has ordered an investigation of the two water companies, but said it felt a hearing with all concerned present would be the best approach to a solution of the situation.

Union to Attend Church

Members of 471 (C. I. O.), United Cafeteria Employes, will worship as guests of the Social Service Club of Galbraith A. M. E. Church at 3:30 p. m. next Sunday. The pastor, the Rev. James L. White, will preach. Mrs. Leonora Walker is president of the club.

Norway In Danger

By Joachim Joesten

Russia's Next Move

Special Correspondence Of The Post

Copenhagen.

THE LATEST trend of events in the extreme North bodes distinctly ill for the future. Almost every day now there comes news of fresh incidents in this once so peaceful corner of Europe. Soviet airplanes over Swedish territory, Soviet submarines preying on Swedish shipping in the Gulf of Bothnia, Soviet protests in Stockholm and Oslo, Swedish protests in Moscow, all accompanied by an unrelenting Soviet-Nazi press-campaign against the northern countries—well, it would seem almost a miracle if nothing more than that should happen!

Personally, I believe Norway is much more in danger of an impending attack from Russia, than is Sweden. There are at least three good reasons for this conjecture:

In the first place, Norway is incomparably weaker in a military sense than Sweden. The difference in population is not so great (2,900,000 as compared with 6,300,000) as the disparity in resources, war potential and actual fighting strength.

Secondly, Swedish territory is as yet inaccessible to the Soviet forces—except of course from the air—while Norway now has a common frontier with Russia (along the occupied Petsamo district) over at least a hundred kilometers.

And thirdly, it is becoming quite clear that the Soviet drive in the extreme North aims much more at the ice-free Atlantic harbors of that region—which all belong to Norway—than at its great mineral wealth — which mostly belongs to Sweden.

MOREOVER, there is one excellent reason why the Soviet high command should prefer to select Norway, rather than Sweden as a prospective next victim: Sweden's northern frontier is heavily fortified and the very important forces which are at present concentrated there—their total is estimated at 60,000 to 70,000—lean on the powerful Boden fortress, north Europe's strongest. By contrast, the tail-like stretch of Norwegian territory that touches upon the occupied "bottleneck" of Petsamo is practically indefensible and hardly even fortified.

The salient feature in any survey of Norway's strategical position is precisely the indefensibility of the more than a thousand miles long tail from Trondhjem to Kirkenes. No other country in the world (except perhaps Chile) has such an uncomfortable appendix to defend in case of war.

On the other hand, one can safely assert that nothing need prevent the trunk of Norway from living on comparatively undisturbed even though its tail should have been chopped of by some foreign power. For, valuable as the northern mines and ports undoubtedly are, their possession is by no means vital to the continued existence of the mainland.

THE DEFENSE of north Norway, then, is quite a distinct chapter from the defense of south Norway; one might even go so far as to assert that it is much more a business of the Finns, Swedes and the British, than of the Norwegians themselves.

It is the interests of these countries, notably Sweden and Great Britain, which would suffer from a Russian invasion of north Norway, much more than Oslo and the trunk of Norway would. For Narvik, although Norwegian in name, is actually a Swedish lung, as its principal use is to transit the iron ore from Kiruna, and it is to Britain these shipments go, now that the German customer is all but cut off.

But quite apart from the question of economic interests involved, the Norwegians could do little to defend their northernmost territory in any case. For, the one thing that is most urgently needed to ward off a Soviet attack on north Norway is a fleet and the Norwegian navy is a joke. Of its four ironclads, with an aggregate tonnage of 14,000 tons, the newest dates from 1900. Of modern material, the Norwegian navy hardly possesses anything but four small destroyers of 590 tons each, plus six submarines and one mine layer—a force far inferior to the Red fleet in the Arctic (Murmansk-Poljarnoe).

NOW, A FLEET is absolutely essential for the defense of north Norway, because the only existing link of communications between "trunk" and "tail" are the fast coastal liners that every day, summer or winter, ply between the capital of the country and Kirkenes, its farthest outpost in the northeast. Kirkenes is more than 2,000 miles away. As yet neither rail nor road connect the northern half of Norway with its southern half.

Of railways, there are none north of Trondhjem except the short stretch of the otherwise Swedish "Iron-Ore-Line" Lulea-Kiruna-Narvik, whose last tip and terminus lie in Norway. For the internal Norwegian communications this line has practically no importance whatever. If soldiers are to be brought up by it, they must needs be Swedish.

As regards roads, the position is, as yet, very curious. There are a number of local networks—especially one fairly well developed that stretches from Kirkenes to Vadso and Vardo around the Varanger fjord—but they are disconnected with one another. Some of the northernmost provinces, like Troms, have no road communications whatever with either the main or their own country, or neighboring Sweden. A big through-road, which is to link up these local networks with one another and with the south, is now under construction but may not be expected to be complete before 1943 at the earliest.

UNDER THESE conditions, it is obvious that Norway, once at war with Russia, will have to rely upon the fleet of some friendly power to protect the dispatch of reinforcements and supplies to these wayless, barren and sparsely inhabited tracts.

Now, what of the Norwegian army? It ranks a long way beneath those of Finland and Sweden. The average Norwegian makes a fine sailor but a rather poor soldier and he is more pacifist by temperament than any other nation, except the Danes. Its peace-time strength consists nominally of six "divisions" (about 18,000 men in all), of which only one division is stationed in the far North, with headquarters at Harstad and minor detachments at Kirkenes and Fort Vardohus (at Vardo).

This so-called fortress, which is supposed to protect the strategically important Varanger fjord actually resembles more a museum piece or a toy fortress than a real one. Besides, the Norwegian army is quite insufficiently trained, as Norway has the shortest training period for any army in the world (84 days on the average).

No wonder a malicious critic once described Norway's armed forces as being "a navy without ships and an army without training." More is required to resist even a Russian invasion!

A last-hour attempt to put the country's ramshackle defenses aright is now being made by the newly appointed defense minister, Col. Birger Ljungberg. At his instance, the Storting (Parliament) has just voted a defense budget of more than 200,000,000 kroner for the financial year 1940-41—an unprecedented record in the annals of Norway.

Uncle Sam, The Umpire

("My conception of government and business is that the government must act as an umpire to see that there is fair play, to call fouls and to follow the ball without prejudices."—Jim Farley.)

I.

"The government must be an ump,
Who oversees the match.
And never tries to bat or slide
Or coach or pitch or catch."
Who is this uttering such words—
Some vested plutocrat?
'Tis not! 'Tis Mr. Farley (Jim)
The well-known Democrat.

II.

"An ump who watches o'er the game
To see that all is fair—
An arbiter who calls the fouls
With calm, judicial air;
Who never takes a turn at bat
Who says this? Wendell Willkie?
No!
It's Jim, the New Deal ace.

III.

"An Uncle Sam who calls 'em as
He sees 'em——that is all—
And doesn't think it's up to him
To hit and field the ball." . . .
This is the need, says Genial Jim,
A ball star in his teens,
And how the New Deal reddens as
It dopes out what he means!

IV.

No prejudices at the plate,
No cheers for either side—
A government that bellows "Ball!"
When one comes low and wide;
A government that calls a strike
When one comes o'er the plate . . .
That's Jim's idea of government,
He's not afraid to state.

V.

An Uncle Sam who doesn't think
He ought to pitch a few—
Who never says, "I guess I'll catch
And show 'em something new"—
An Uncle Sam who doesn't yearn
To pole one o'er the fence . . .
That's Big Jim's notion, and it stirs
A lot of New Deal gents.

VI.

A government that throws no curves
And leaves all "spitters" to
The hurlers on the rival teams
With no tips what to do;
A government that only wants
To see both sides play "squar"—
That's Jim's amazing view of it
Yoo hoo, there F. D. R.!

People back home still don't know how bad that recent cold spell really was down here in Florida. I hooked a sailfish in the Gulf Stream and a walrus took it right off my line. One night at the dog races the electric rabbit struck for heavier fur. They had to build a fire under the photo finish camera at Hialeah three days in a row. But that wasn't the payoff the Miami Herald and Jim Cox's News actually dropped headlines about how cold it was in the North and came out in four straight issues with the blazer "Freeze Threatens Florida Tonight."

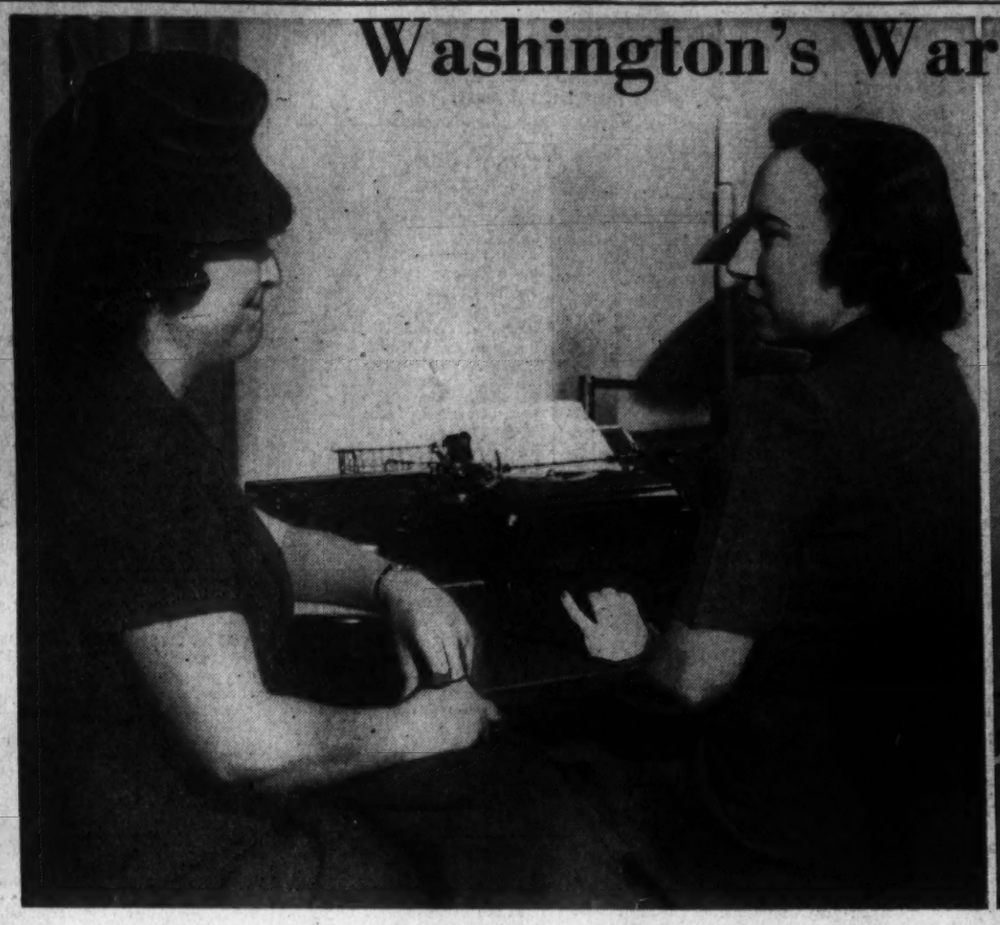
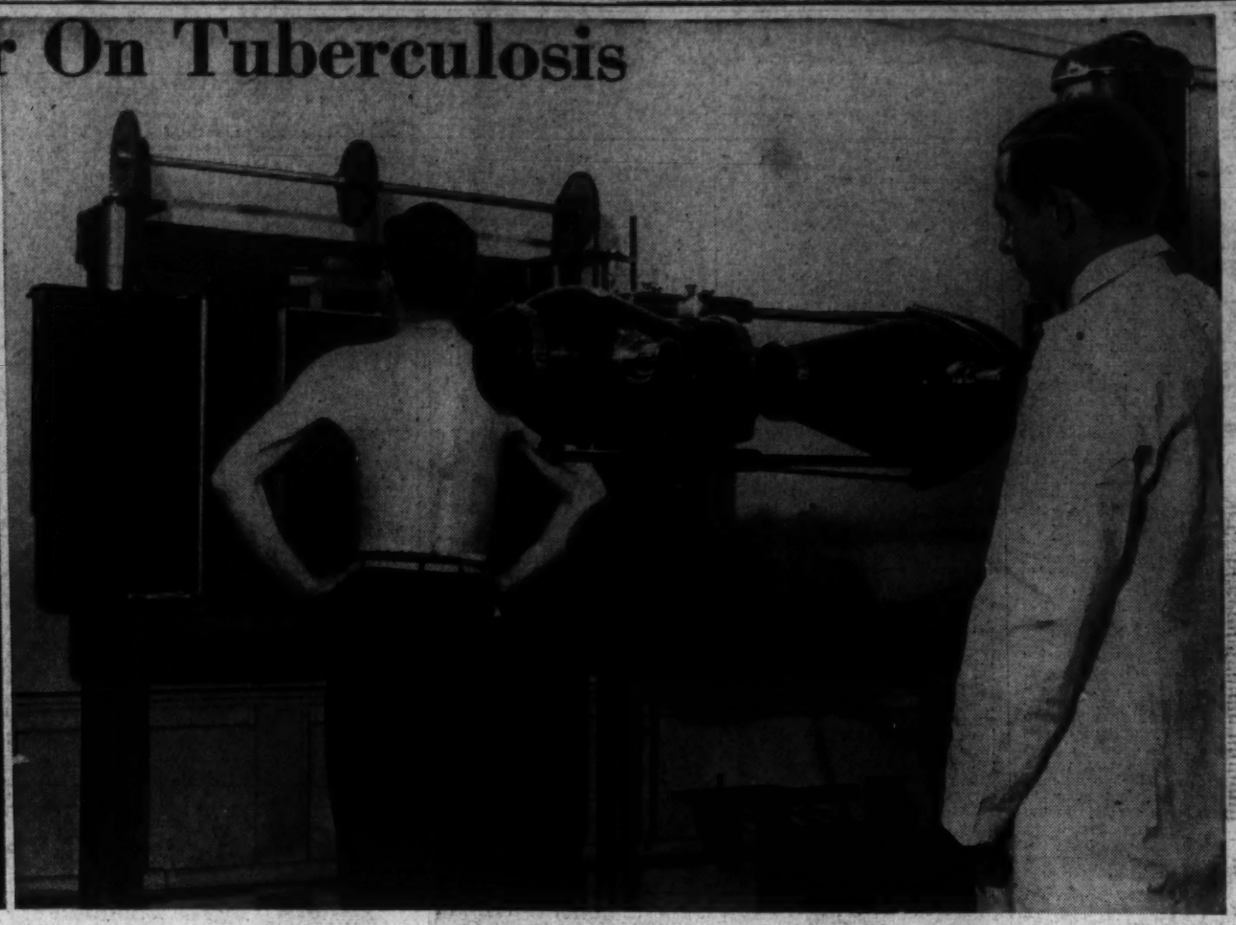
Washington's War On Tuberculosis



1. ADMISSION OF PATIENTS—The Bureau for Tuberculosis of the Health Department, through its tuberculosis clinics, admitted during 1939—6,864 new patients. Most of these were referred by some District agency or private physician, but there were still others who knew of their contact with a known case of tuberculosis, or who had symptoms leading them to believe that they might have tuberculosis. A total of 27,548 visits to the two clinics were made by patients on their active roll



2. X-RAYING OF PATIENTS—After a history is taken, the patient is X-rayed so that there will be no doubt as to whether there is disease. Tuberculosis in its beginning cannot be detected, in the majority of cases, by the physical examination of the chest. In 1939, 11,475 X-rays were taken by the chest clinic—an increase of over 100 per cent since 1936

3. CLEARANCE IN REGARD TO HOSPITALIZATION—All cases with active disease are referred to the hospital. The above shows a nurse, assigned especially to this duty, interviewing a recently diagnosed case, trying to straighten out the financial and social difficulties caused by the proposed hospitalization and instructing the patient as to the necessary isolation and precautionary measures to be followed until he is admitted for treatment

Recent refusal of the District Tuberculosis Association to grant the Health Department's request for funds to carry on its chest clinics—work which has been partly responsible for the reduction in Washington's high tuberculosis death rate—has directed attention to the Bureau of Tuberculosis for the District.

Program of the bureau, organized in 1936 by Dr. A. Barklie Coulter, primarily is to find the active case, isolate it in a sanatorium until the disease is arrested and to examine the contacts of such case to determine whether or not they are tuberculous.

1936, 1937, 1938, 1939

	15 years and under			16 years and over			TOTAL DEATHS

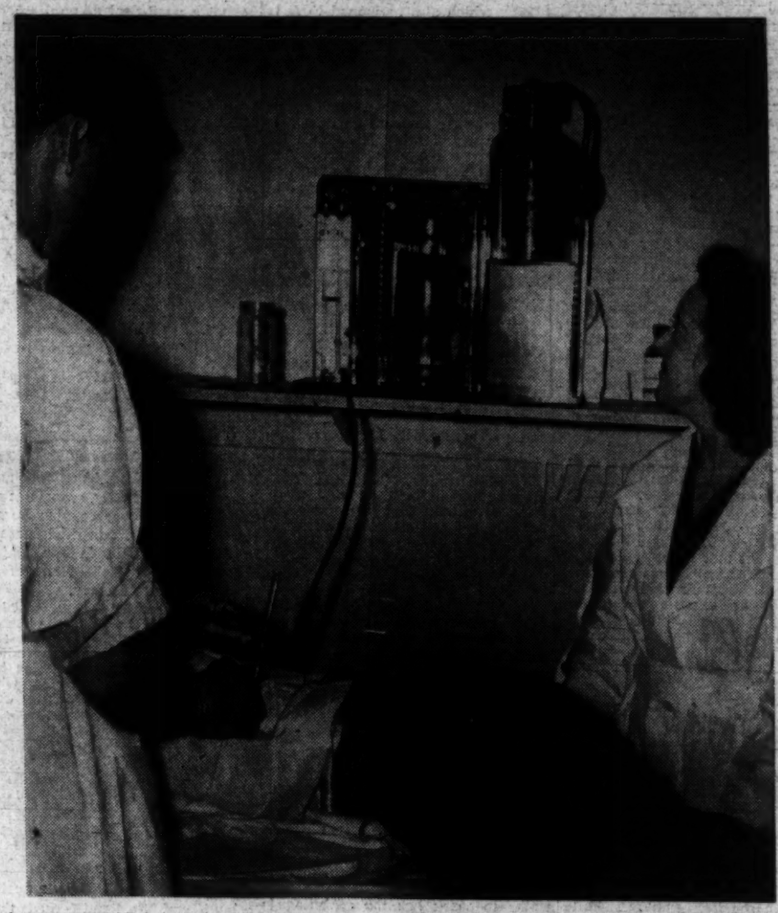
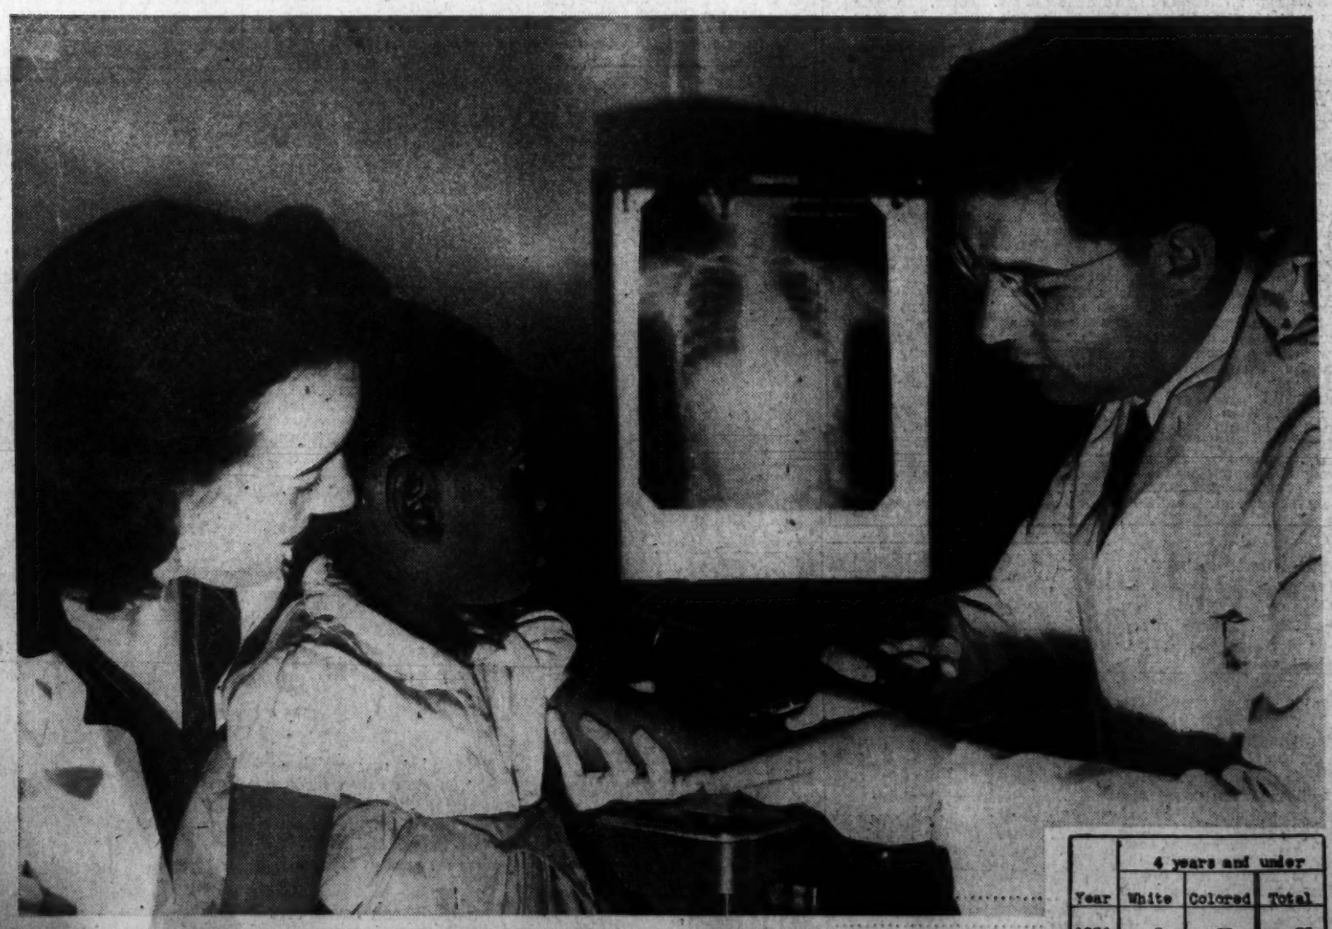
1939	2	29	31	167	370	537	568

Reporting of all cases of tuberculosis is required by law. Last year there were 6,800 new cases recorded by the bureau and 27,800 visits were made to the chest clinic at 469 C street northwest. Correlation of all this—to locate the source of infection—is the work of seven clerks. Two are paid by the District government. Five, because of an insufficient Congressional appropriation, have been paid through the District Tuberculosis Association. Unless the request for $11,300 is granted, these five clerks will be dropped and the clinics will become but clearing houses for those stricken with tuberculosis, Dr. Coulter said yesterday.



4. PNEUMOTHORAX—Here we see a patient being given pneumothorax, or collapse of the lung. These are cases that have been in the sanatorium, but could not be discharged unless there was a periodic injection of air into the chest to keep the lung collapsed. During 1939, 3,344 such patients were treated—an increase of over 100 per cent since 1937



5. TUBERCULIN TESTING OF CHILDREN—All children are first given the tuberculin test to find out whether or not they have been infected with the tubercle bacillus. Many of these are the children of known tuberculous parents who are now hospitalized at Glenn Dale or Gallinger. If the tuberculin test is positive, the child is X-rayed to determine whether or not the disease has developed, and if not, is periodically brought back to the clinic for checkup. Deaths in children, from birth to 16 years of age, have been reduced from 59 in 1936 to 31 in 1939, and only two white children died last year. 6. GLENN DALE—The majority of patients, after a short time in the sanatorium, find that the forced cure for tuberculosis is not as bad as it at first seems, but nevertheless look forward to the day when they can return again to society as wage-earners

Costume Jewelry Goes 'Back to Nature' in Design

The new costume jewel accents for spring emphasize color. Color glows in necklaces, bracelets, earrings and collarbone ornaments made of composition, plastics, enamels and jewel-set metals. While gold continues in favor, silver jumps ahead for a slight lead-off. Newest of all accents are those that take their inspiration straight from Mother Nature. Many necklaces are masses of roses, violets or pansies swung from a green cord that simulates a stem. Bracelets are also important and are often designed to match a necklace. Left—Pearl-rimmed gold metal swirls, simulating white capped waves, make the necklaces and earrings. Designed by Clifford Furst to wear with a black frock, the necklace matches the back swirl of the black and white straw hat. Right—Pansy costume jewels in soft, purple tones top a navy spring frock and a frivolous white sailor filmed with a white veil. Leo Glass designed these matching flower accents

The Stars Now Are Wearing the 'Natural Brow'

Hollywood, Calif.—Along with cupid bow lips and pink face powder the pin-point eyebrow line has been relegated to the beauty shelf. Today it's the natural brow, easily achieved with four simple tools: a tweezer, magnifying mirror, pencil and brush.

Brunettes with dark brows have it comparatively easy on the road to brow beauty. Jane Gilbert, for example, merely plucks out the stray hairs over the bridge of her nose, over and under the line she wants, and for evening darkens them subtly with a black pencil. But it isn't as easy as it sounds. The tweezer has wrought plenty of havoc, leaving a girl looking like a startled fawn and slightly denuded because she didn't know the tricks. Never pluck the brows from the top. Decide on the curve you want and pluck from below. The normal brow line is one that follows the curve of the uper lid, so avoid bird wing brows and the half-moon arch unless you're the true exotic or think a baby stare becoming.

Some girls dread the tweezer like a dentist's pliers, but the pulling process may be made practically painless if a little face cream is massaged into the brows and the skin drawn taut.

Blondes with almost imperceptible brows like Jane Bryan's should use a brown pencil in short, light strokes. Never draw a hard line in one bold sweep of the pencil. Leave the inner and outer corners a bit lighter than the real height of the arch.

If you prefer a brush and mascara apply the cosmetic on brows brushed the wrong way, allowing it to dry slightly before brushing smooth again.

The Gentler Sex

By MALVINA LINDSAY

Pennies for Thoughts

IMMEDIATE aid for the tongue-tied guest who sits dumbly in the corner unable to participate in the brilliant conversation about him is now promised by Mrs. Henrietta DeGoofey.

Mrs. DeGoofey

The famous founder and president of the Do Something About It League announced yesterday at her press conference that she would shortly open an Opinion Shoppe, where social conversation could be bought in packages.

This will be the second shoppe within the year that Mrs. DeGoofey has launched, her first being a Gimcrack Shoppe for the disposal of household and personal gewgaws.

"I find," said the intrepid reformer, "that many persons are undergoing social embarrassment in Washington because they cannot discourse learnedly on politics, art, literature and other subjects brought up at cocktail parties, dinners, etc. For instance, it is most humiliating when someone says, 'I wonder if Roosevelt will run again,' not to be able to contribute such an intriguing comment as, 'Well, I wouldn't want this to go any further, but a friend of mine whose wife is very close to a White House gardener's sister-in-law has it on unimpeachable authority that we may expect—anything.'

"Now at my Opinion Shoppe I shall have on sale similar assorted opinions on all topics of the day. Think how convenient that will be! A wife can merely say to her husband, 'John, we have to go to the Gabbles, so be sure to stop by and get a package of remarks about 'Gone With the Wind,' the Finnish loan, Hitler's love life, and anything else interesting they have on hand.'

Safety First In All Comment

"Now you see under this plan you will be able to talk about books without having read them, about plays, movies, art exhibits etc, without having attended them, and even about people without knowing them, for I shall sell gossip as well as profundities."

"But wouldn't purchasers run the risk of expressing the Wrong Idea in the presence of the Right People?" asked a society writer.

"No, because all of my opinions are guaranteed to cause no controversy, to have no kickbacks. For instance, suppose someone asks, 'Just why was Hore-Belisha bounced?' You may assume a mysterious mien, and produce one of your purchasers from the Opinion Shoppe, as, 'Well, there is much more back of this thing than we realize.' Then, if pressed, you may add, 'I have information from my secret foreign sources, that I am not at liberty to divulge.' In fact, that last remark may serve as a comment on almost any phase of the European situation. And, incidentally, if you purchased it at my Opinion Shoppe, it would cost you 25 cents."

"Have you some equally safe political opinions for sale?" asked an editorial writer.

"Plenty of them. Of course, the Opinion Shoppe will carry all the old standbys as 'Yes—and again, No.' 'Anything is likely to happen before election.' 'All those things are relative.' etc. Then I will also have political opinions for sale suitable to take to varying types of homes, as those of rabid New Dealers, stuffy old-guard Republicans, rock-ribbed Democrats, parlor Pinks etc.

"However, I expect to do my biggest business in the lighter forms of comment, such as that pertaining to movies."

How to Be Arty About the Cinema

"But surely, anyone can talk about the movies," exclaimed a girl reporter. "All you have to say is that you like Clark Gable."

"That's just were you're wrong!" exclaimed Mrs. DeGoofey. "It is distinctly passe to talk about the movies in terms of the stars. Now I shall have on sale such modern movie comment as, 'The direction couldn't have been better,' or 'The sets are most intriguing' 'Bits of it were execellent, but it definitely has too much mass appeal,' or best of all, 'I much prefer the foreign cinemas.'

"Now if you are going among some very arty people you can purchase opinions on poetry such as 'When I was much younger I had quite a passion for free verse,' or 'It was very well done for a thing of that kind,' or 'I don't think he's quite found himself yet,' or 'The lighting effects were very unusual' or 'He has one good act.'

"However, I do not intend to give all my merchandise away. I will offer comment on any subject in a neat cellophaned package for only 25 cents——"

"Mrs. DeGoofey, just one more question," interrupted a civic association reporter. "What comment do you suggest on the subject of reform?"

"Well, of course, that is my own—er racket, and I don't like to give all my trade secrets away," But I will say this much—whenever in a tight spot in a group of reform-minded people, you can always exclaim, 'The situation is a challenge to all decent citizens.'"

Colored Zippers, Novel Sashes to Brighten Dresses

Hollywood, Calif.—We've seen detail become important on the front of a dress, and definitely in the back with bustles. Now spring will concentrate on a new side view with contrasting lacings, unique buttons, colored zippers, pleats and novel sashes.

Merle Oberon has a smart sports dress in "We Shall Meet Again," in nude flannel, with a 3-inch navy zipper Orry-Kelly, the designer, has matched in navy accessories. In the same film, Binnie Barnes' pencil blue crepe model has a full bloused top, pulled into gathers at one side, the skirt also draped thither and fastened with a brilliant clip.

Rough, heavy fabrics, such as hopsacking and tweedy linen, will contrarily show up in a season of even greater femininity, done often in short or very long tunic boleros, laced up one side in some bright contrast. Merilyn Merrick has one of the latter toppers in imported cocoa duvetyn, laced peasant style with scarlet suede. Another for the new film discovery doesn't quite reach her waistline, is in natural sacking and side-fastened like a coolie coat with huge bark buttons.

Then there's brunette Brenda Marshall, whose favorite shade of green appears in buttons that spell her first name up the left side of a fuzzy gray cardigan.

Sashes tied in enormous side hip bows will be piped in a gay color that's matched in pumps and a bag. Rosemary Lane illustrates how charming this can look in a white resort wool, the trim of red and white pin-striped satin.

There's quite an impressive crop of babies this year in the New York Newspaper Woman's Club. The same thing goes for several other business women's groups in the big town. For domesticity is back in style.

Your Figure, Madame!

Diets Fall Off As Pounds Stay Put

Abandonments Come When Scales Fail To Show Declines

By Ida Jean Kain

A HIGH percentage of the slimming programs that began the first week in January will come to an end the first week in February. The reason for this wholesale abandonment of reducing programs is clearcut: The pounds are no longer as easily clipped off as they were at first.

At the beginning of a diet, you are rewarded with a prompt decline in weight. It's perfectly simple. You diet—you lose. And the steady weight loss is all the incentive you need to stick to your diet. But sooner or later this "pleasant" phase of reducing comes to an end. And usually this occurs between the third and fourth weeks.

What happens is this: You reach a stage where all the science of calories won't make any difference in the figure on the scale. And what can you do about it? Nothing! Nothing except to continue your diet! It isn't easy, but you knew that.

Those Standstills

And now that we're looking on the dark side, you may as well be prepared for worse. You may not lose again for several weeks. But if you stay with your diet, one fine morning—when you are about to give up hope—the scale will be down a couple of pounds. And maybe the next morning a couple more. If you stay on your diet, this standstill is inevitably followed by a loss of considerable weight.

Then everything will run along smoothly again—until you strike another of those weight standstills! You may encounter several of them before you get your weight down to normal. A chart of the average weight reduction would not show an unbroken downward curve. It would look more like several flights of stairs, with a decline, then a level, then another decline and another level.

It might help you to carry on during these periods if you felt you had an ace trick up your sleeves . . . you have one in the form of the 800-calorie diet. When your regular diet has failed you for a week or two, you may be able to give the pounds a perceptible jolt by dropping down to 800 calories. On any day that you take so few calories, however, you must supplement the menu's with one Vitamin A, B, D, G concentrate.

Bolster Confidence

Your exercises are as important as your diet during a weight standstill—and much more rewarding! As long as you keep on exercising you can count absolutely on a decrease in inches—it's a law of diminishing returns!

You can bolster your confidence by checking your measurements. After all, it is a perfect figure you're after and every day's exercise brings you closer to the goal. And if there is anything to equal the satisfaction of having to take a tuck in the waist of an old frock, tell me what it is!

Manhattan in Dither Over Glamorous Movie Personnel in Its Midst; Garbo, Hedy Lamarr Keep Photographers Busy

New York, Feb. 5.

MAYOR LaGuardia will never shift the movies from Hollywood to our town, for obvious reasons, but fate has turned us into an important branch of the place at present, and New York is in a high dither over the gorgeous picture personnel now taking their fun where they find it in our midst.

Alice Hughes

Hedy Lamarr, the 50,000 most tiful living women, is pursued hither and thither by reporters and our vicious little autograph-lizards. Also by mere sightseers, for she's a tremendous vision. She goes about to night clubs, scattering her beauty lavishly, and dancing many a dance with her stripping husband, Gene Markey, who was once a cartoonist and who is now in the producting end of the film racket. I even followed her to the Monte Carlo, though Spouse Hall beat me by nearly a city block, as his susceptibility to feminine beauty is a hissing and a byword in many places. The prize pippin was wearing a flattering gown of black velvet and pink satin, and when I first saw her, she was dancing with "Sonny" Whitney, who wore the conventional black.

Garbo's visit was simultaneous, and she was seen in public more often than usual. Perhaps it is because she now laughs in the movies. Her escort was Bengamin Gaylord Hauser, the big carrot and spinach man, with whom the shy Swede has been romatnically linked for some months, but I wouldn't know about that. I do know that Hauser's diet has put a few needed pounds on the silent Scandinavian. She even turned up one night at the Algonquin Supper Club, togged out in a black shirtwaist dress with a big Peter Pan collar, and on her feet very low heeled black suede shoes. Garbo has always been a simple dresser, favoring severely cut suits. Add to this pair the slumbrous-eyed Dorothy Lamour, whose best party dress is a lovely silver lame, and you'll see why the town is agog and agaga.

GIRL ABOUT TOWN—The biggest ball of our winter, the Beaux Arts matter, has now passed in and out of minor history. One firm pulled a magnificent publicity stunt by sending one of its prettiest salesgirls, Theodora Caruso, to the ball completely dressed, even to jewelry, in products from the store, which is a 5-and-10 center. Her entire rigout is said to have cost $7.28., Some difference from the rest of the folks. Of course, the Beaux Arts isn't what it was when the late Mrs. Stanwood Menken was belle of the ball with her costly and fantastic costumes. I remember one which consisted, in part of a lot of neon lights, and Mrs. M. literally lighted her own way around the party. . . . Her son, is the adventurous newsreel cameraman, Arthur Menken, who managed to get the first and best footage out of the Finnish shambles. He also covered the late Spanish civil war. Where trouble is, so is Arthur and his camera.

Pretty girls from all over the Nation are pouring through our gates, for one of the transcontinental airlines is starting the biggest stewardess class yet organized. No less than 80 girls will learn how to make the public flight-happy in the school out at LaGuardia Field, which is New York's shiny new airport. . . . The American Kennel Club has run off its annual dog show, and has put some beauty on the sports pages by running pictures of four ladies holding their champion pooches. Every one of the lot is a stunner, and makes me wonder whether owning a high class dog is a beauty aid. I'll never forget one dog show a crowd of us attended, and when one of my girl chums leaned over to give one a friendly pat, the darned beast bit off the tip of her nose, which led to costly and trying plastic surgery. . . . Mrs. Margaret Eulich Roberts is spending part of her second honeymoon here. Her first, with a mining engineer who later died, was spent in the interior of Africa. She likes this better.

Clare Potter has just designed a collection of brides' dresses I saw the other day, but these are different. Though they look properly bridey, they can be worn after the ceremony as well, while buckling down to matrimony. This is a very practical notion, I think—and typical of our times.

Baked Stuffed Lobster Excellent Lenten Dish

LENTEN dishes need not be a problem if the many delicious fish entrees are served. Lent begins tomorrow—Ash Wednesday—and a high spot in any menu for those abstaining from meat might be a stuffed baked lobster. The following recipe is one that will give splendid results.

Baked Stuffed Lobster

Split in half a freshly boiled lobster. Remove the meat. Melt ¾ tablespoon butter and stir into it until well blended ¾ tablespoon flour. Then stir in slowly ½ cup chicken or other light stock. Season the sauce with 1¼ teaspoons dry mustard, 1 teaspoon chopped onion, salt and paprika. Melt in a saucepan 2 tablespoons butter. Saute the lobster meat in the butter until heated. Add the boiling sauce. Simmer these ingredients for 2 minutes. Remove from the fire. Beat 1 tablespoon cream and 2 egg yolks and add these ingredients to the lobster with ½ cup sauted mushrooms, chopped. Fill the lobster shells with the mixture. Cover them with buttered crumbs. Bake the lobster in a moderate oven, 375 degrees until the crumbs are brown.

Table Lamps Undergoing Many Style Changes; Are Larger in Scale and Have Versatile Designs

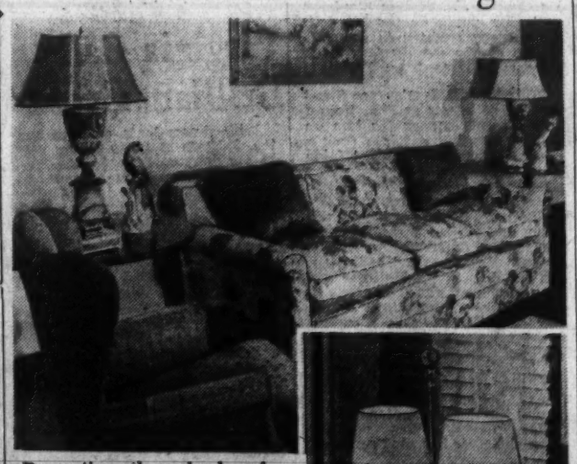
Gas and Oil Types Stage A Comeback

By Elizabeth MacRae Boykin

THERE will be light on a dark subject if we listen to the lamp manufacturers this season. For they have brought out several revolutionary ideas in home lighting; notably there is the polaroid lamp that is now on the market, providing a marvelously diffused yet properly concentrated light that embodies a new principle of lighting. In addition, we may expect to see more indirect lighting units, achieved by separate reflector lamps as well as by built-in cove units.

But just plain table lamps are undergoing many style changes, too. In the first place, they will be much larger in scale and hence far more utilitarian than the dinky little numbers that have cluttered up the scene for too long. Then there wil be more versatility in base designs. In place of the plain columns or vases that have been used for lamp bases, there will be a great many unusual architectural details used for bases—Greek colonnades or capitals, masks and reproductions of stone grotesques will be seen as sophisticated lamp bases. Modern wooden columns of tall, graceful form will be seen, frequently in dark finishes and sometimes touched with gold. Blackamoors are being used again as lamp bases. And be watching for plastics such as lucite, for dramatic lamps. The "Gone With the Wind" vogue will be responsible for the coming popularity of gas or oil type of lamp, but the revivals belong to the more formal and elaborate type with crystal prism drops, intricately painted base and globe. Hurricane type of lamps will also be seen.

As for shades, you may look for beige and fawn colors to be of popular importance, with moires and stripes as high fashion notes. There is a revival of fancier shades such as those finished with frayed full ruffs of silk, and fringes looped in swags around the shade will continue to be used. Be prepared also for hoop-skirted effects and furbelows galore if you can take them. Opaque shades in the dark colors or in metallic papers are decorator preferences, and some of these are often seen in such colors as deep olive greens, browns and dusky blacks, always with a white lining.



Decoration depends largely on lamps used. The pair of urn lamps shown above not only supply decoration but adequate light. An interesting lamps is the double one used on the desk at the right. This type of lamp throws down excellent light for reading and study

Americans Ignore Parisian Styles

New York (AP).—A difference in the clothes needs of European and American women has been apparent since the war, and the American fashion world already has made some breaks from the Paris tradition. For years Paris decreed "black" and the fashion world obeyed.

Since the war, however, the American love of color has surged to the fore and, while Parisians continue to wear dark clothes, light and colorful winter frocks are being worn in New York.

Blushing Bride Passe; She Now Gets the License

Fredericksburg, Va., (AP).—Court Clerk Mason H. Willis, who knows whereof he speaks, says the proverbial blushing bride has vanished as completely as the dinosaur.

Since January, 1939, when Fredericksburg became the quick-marriage center of the East, Clerk Willis has met more than 2,000 would-be brides. He says he has yet to observe a blush.

Many present-day brides actually take the leading role in premarital arrangements. Nine times out of ten, Willis avers, it is the bride-elect who writes or telephones here for first-hand information on Virginia's marriage laws. And just as often she answers all the questions Willis is required to ask before issuing a license; even those pertaining to the name, age, occupation, parentage and address of her intended.

"And don't you know," said Willis, "every now and then the women pay for the license."

Willis' only explanation of this transformation is that most women who elope to Fredericksburg are "beyond the blushing age." His statistics reveal that the average Fredericksburg bride is 27, the average groom 30.

Society in Last Fling Before Lenten Lull

Gertrude Pearson, Bride-Elect, Honored At Luncheon; Mrs. Clapper Given Campaign Party, Although She Isn't a Candidate

By Hope Ridings Miller.

SEVERAL LUNCHEONS and a tea accented yesterday afternoon's social whirl, as Washington residents launched their last fling before the Lenten lull sets in.

Miss Gertrude Pearson, who will walk down the bridal aisle on Saturday, was feted at a luncheon at the Chevy Chase Club. Mrs. Raymond Clapper, who celebrated her birthday yesterday, was guest of honor at a similar fete given by Mrs. J. Fred Essary, and Miss Cornelia Van A. Chapin, noted sculptor, who is the house guest of her sister, Mrs. Francis Biddle, was complimented at still another luncheon.

HOPE R. MILLER

Among the teas on yesterday's calendar was the one given by Dr. and Mrs. Edward Acheson in their apartment at the Governor Shepherd where a sizable number of guests called to greet the honor guests, Dr. and Mrs. John Latimer. Dr. Acheson and Dr. Latimer are members of the faculty of George Washington University.

To begin at the beginning—bride-elect Gertrude Pearson, who has been feted at a continual round of parties the past few days, said yesterday's luncheon in her honor was one of the last on her pre-nuptial calendar. But she and her fiance will be honored once more on Friday evening when Miss Martha McKenna entertains at a buffet supper following the wedding rehearsal on Friday.

Mrs. William Guthrie and Mrs. F. Henry Jones were joint hostesses yesterday when two tables, both decorated with spring blossoms, were reserved for the party. Miss Pearson and her bridesmaids and other friends sat at one, while Mrs. Guthrie, Mrs. Jones and Mrs. William Edmondston Parson mother of the bride-elect, were at another.

The company included Miss McKenna, Miss Mary Whiteley, Miss Martha Talley, Miss Katherine Pearson, Miss Edith Pearson and Miss Kate Johnson, of Princeton, N. J., all of whom will be attendants in the wedding. Other guests were Miss Ruth Dunlop, Miss Margaret Abell, Miss Leslie Birchell, Mrs. Lothrop Luttrell and Mrs. Hamilton O'Dunne.

Among those who have entertained recently for Miss Pearson and her fiance are Miss Ruth Hale, Miss Abell, Miss Virginia Palmer and Miss Kearsley Caldwell and the Misses Katherine and Edith Pearson, who feted their sister, and her fiance, F. M. Durrance, at a dinner dance at the Chevy Chase Club the past week-end.

Miss Chapin Feted by Sister

Meanwhile yesterday Miss Cornelia Van A. Chapin, noted sculptress, whose exhibition is full speed ahead at the Whyte Gallery, was a guest at a small luncheon given by her sister, Mrs. Francis Biddle.

Since the hostess, who with her husband, the new Solicitor General, has just moved into a new apartment at 2101 Connecticut Avenue, hasn't "even had time to look over her dishes and silver," the party took place at Pierre's. The company, gathered in on the spur of the moment, included Mrs. Hamilton Fish, Mrs. Robert H. Dunlap, and Mrs. Edward R. Finkenstaedt. Miss Chapin and Mrs. Biddle will be luncheon guests at the White House today, and the former will return to her home in New York tomorrow.

'Campaign Luncheon' Honors Mrs. Clapper

Although she declares she is "not running for anything," Mrs. Raymond Clapper was guest of honor at a combination birthday and campaign luncheon given by Mrs. J. Fred Essary at her home on Newark street. The fete was planned by the hostess as a gesture in recognition of Mrs. Clapper's "platform presence" and the fact that if she chose to throw her hat in the ring—whether for the Senate, the House, or some more minor political position, she might gain plenty of support.

All those invited to the luncheon were asked to bring "something to aid Olive Clapper in her campaign—although she hasn't yet decided to run." So, appropriately, Mrs. Harold, Ickes, wife of the Secretary of the Interior, appeared with a brand-new aluminum pot containing a picked chicken. "A chicken in every pot" helps any candidate—according to Mrs. Ickes. Mrs. D. Worth Clark, wife of Senator Clark, of Idaho, also was among the guests bringing along a helpful gift and a suggestion. Others there included Mrs. Edgar Goodrich, Mrs. Albert Warner, Mrs. Irene Caldwell, Mrs. Samuel Tilden Ansell, jr., and Mrs. Bulkley Griffin.

Each gift was presented with a fitting message. For example, Mrs. Griffin had with her present a slogan—"Vote for dapper Clapper, the liberal flapper." Mrs. Albert Warner resorted to prose for her greeting:

"Dear Olive: You remember Al Smith and Herbert Hoover, don't you? And what the radio did for them? And you know Albert Warner, don't you—Columbia's internationally famous Washington correspondent (adv.). And you've seen his wife's mink coat, haven't you? Neither has she. Well, which would you rather be? No, don't tell us. I couldn't bear it. This little gadget with which you are about to be presented is to help you with your radio presentations. If you follow the directions carefully, you will not be able to restrain your ejaculations."

The gadget in question turned out to be a miniature microphone in which the guest of honor utters a modest "hello," pressed a button and got for her trouble a first-class shock.

Best poem accompanying gifts to Mrs. Clapper went with Mrs. Goodrich's gift and read in part:

"I've seen a lot of candidates and most of them are funny;
But Montgomery's got a winner now
And, girls, she is a honey.
She'll take the Eastern Shore in camp
Make a clean sweep in the West
The balloteers in the old Free State
Will holler "Clapper's Best."

At the end of the pleasant luncheon, however, the guest of honor was loudly acclaiming that despite the boom, she was "not in any race for anything."

Gayly accenting yesterday afternoon's round was the party given by Dr. and Mrs. Acheson when they entertained a small group at cocktail time in honor of Dr. and Mrs. Latimer. Among those who called at the Acheson apartment from 5 to 7 p. m. were Miss Tessa Van Someren, of London, who is the guest of Mr. and Mrs. William Hard and who will be feted at a party given by the Hards on Saturday; Mr. and Mrs. David Cushman Coyle, Lowell Mellett, Mr. and Mrs. Sam Scrivener, Dr. Stuart Rice, Mr. and Mrs. Malcom Ross, Glenn Anderson and the Mexican Minister-Counselor, Dr. Don Luis Quintanilla.

Still others there included Mr. and Mrs. Charles Hurd, Edward Baltz, Mrs. Steuart Henderson Britt, Miss Carol Agar, Mr. and Mrs. Harlan Miller, Samurl Kata, Miss Meredith Howard and Mr. and Mrs. Edward Howrey, of Fairfax, Va.

Mrs. Roosevelt Gives Musicale At White House

With the "season" rapidly coming to a close, Mrs. Roosevelt has few social engagements on her calendar these days. Conferences in general, and the American Youth Congress in particular, still seem to have main claim on the First Lady's busy schedule.

Just incidentally Mrs. Roosevelt, when asked at her press conference yesterday, said she didn't feel in the least slighted at being excluded from this year's list of the 10 best dressed women in the world, which included Queen Elizabeth of England.

Yesterday afternoon there was a musicale at the White House, attended for the most part by residents who were omitted from the guest list of state receptions this season. Artists at the concert, which started at 4 o'clock, included Miss Germaine Leroux, pianist; Sydney Rayner, tenor and Miss Sally Leff, accompanist.

After attending a meeting of the Youth Congress this morning, Mrs. Roosevelt will entertain at a large luncheon at the White House. Later in the afternoon there will be a tea for the National Democratic Committee. This evening she will divide her time between the Forum sponsored by the Women's Democratic Club and the Navy Relief Ball at the Sail Loft in the Navy Yard.

Tomorrow will be a comparatively quiet day. Mrs. Roosevelt plans to leave in the evening for Boston where she will stay over Thursday.

On Friday she will return to the White House and will be with the President on Saturday when he speaks from the south portico of the Executive Mansion at 12:30 o'clock to the Citizenship Institute. On Monday she is planning to attend the Congressional Club luncheon.

Spills Fail to Chill D. C. Ski Enthusiasts In Quest for Thrills on Nearby Wintry Hills

THEIR ENTHUSIASM undampened by the major and minor calamities which befell eager skiers in the neighboring hills during the past week, a delegation will leave town Friday to try their luck at Mont Tremblant in Canada. All more or less experience in this sport, they include Laura Tuckerman, Cuthbert Train, Elsie Ekengren and Betty Shouse.

Miss Ekengren recently returned from a ski workout at Sun Valley and the others spent some time last winter at St. Sauveur. They have leased several cottages at Mont Tremblant and will be gone two weeks.

The party expects to be joined by Cornelius and George Agnew, of New York, and later by Mr. and Mrs. Creighton Peet, of Washington. Mr. and Mrs. Edward Burling, jr., may get up the end of the month, but Mrs. Burling is recuperating from an appendicitis operation.

Count and Countess van Rechteren Limpurg, who did a lot of skiing when they were in Sweden, have been among those taking advantage of the recent snow to ski on the hills around Washington on Sunday afternoons.

THE ONE THING Tallulah Bankhead wants to see during her stay in Washington—after her family—is the Supreme Court. She has attended sessions of Congress many times and spent hours in routine sightseeing ,but has never witnessed the nine justices in action.

Miss Bankhead is spending her spare time here with her father, the Speaker of the House, whom she hasn't seen since her play opened a year ago. Representative Bankhead has a slight touch of flu, and so has Uncle John (Senator Bankhead) but the actress says that she was born with a cold and so doesn't expect to catch the grippe from them.

Tonight after the show the star will receive backstage the Minister of Finland, Hjalmar Procope. It will be their first meeting.

On leaving Washington Miss Bankhead will take her troupe on a two-year tour of this country and Canada. She will attend a benefit reception for Spanish refugees on Friday, but is limiting her social engagements so as to be with her father.

ANOTHER VISITOR who is limiting his social life, much to the disappointment of Capital debs, is Prince Bertil of Sweden. He is accepting only a handful of invitations as he is too busy with his trade delegation. The prince is now in New York and will travel frequently before leaving here the end of the month.

ODDS AND ENDS: Eleanor Flood has lost 10 pounds since enrolling in a local foreign service school. However, she will continue to do her home work religiously even if law and economics are difficult . . . At least half a dozen new members have been added to the busy staff of the Finnish legation since the war started. The military attache gets around 70 applications a day from Americans who want to fight for his country . . . Stellita Stapleton will give a talk on the 250 dolls from every country in her collection at the weekly tea of the Congressional Club on Friday.

FLASHBACKS: Clarence Streit and the 40 guests at Mrs. Robert Low Bacon's supper for him on Sunday evening got into such a lively discussion on his "Union Now" brainchild that they didn't sit down to eat until 1 o'clock in the morning. Representative Joseph Martin asked the most questions, and others there included Senator and Mrs. Warren Austin, Mr. and Mrs. Robert Woods Bliss, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Waltman and Mr. and Mrs. Richard Sanger . . . Ataloa, the interesting Indian singer now visiting in Washington, was quite disappointed when Mr. and Mrs. L. Corrin Strong, old friends, told her they'd finally sold their sailboat which they had named in her honor. All the Strong boats have Indian names. Ataloa wears Indian costume when she gives her song recitals.

Envoy Gives Carlos Chavez Cocktail Party

Mexican Composer Will Leave Capital Soon on 'Grand Tour'

By Carolyn Bell.

A handsome musician, Carlos Chavez—Mexico's foremost composer, as a matter of fact—provided the cause for a merry cocktail party given at the Mexican Embassy yesterday afternoon by the Ambassador and Senora de Castillo Najera.

The affair being strictly informal, the receiving line, composed of the hosts and their honor guest, "broke up" early in the afternoon and Senor Chavez chatted with first one person and then another, many of whom were old friends. Leaving Washington shortly, the musician, who conducted the National Symphony Orchestra on Sunday, will go to New York and then to California before completing his "grand tour" of the United States.

Senora de Najera Wears Tea Frock

Senora de Castillo Najera, whose tea-length black crepe frock was trimmed in three large brilliant clips, after greeting her guests ushered them into the dining room where a buffet table was loaded with food. A large spring bouquet, made up of rosy tulips, iris and jonquils, centered the table where everything from dainty watercress sandwiches to a Mexican rice concoction were to be had.

Snow may still be cluttering up the streets, but spring is definitely in the air, at least as far as milady's costume is concerned. The flower-decked chapeau and that little-print-frock-to-brighten-up-the-wardrobe were very much in evidence yesterday. Doffing her usual furs, Mme. Espil appeared smartly turned out in a deep hunter's green outfit. With her husband, the Ambassador from Argentina, she was an early caller.

A popular spot was the glassed-in patio where birds chirped to the accompaniment of popping corks and the swish of whiskey and soda. The numerous birds, usually covered up for evening affairs, were quite an attraction yesterday. The Ambassador of Ecuador, Capitan Colon Eloy Alfaro, was in deep conversation with Mme. Ertegun when we spied him and they were discussing (of all things!) diets.

Pastorizas Attend Party

A cluster of yellow blooms topped off the smart hat worn by Senora de De Bayle, who was among the guests as were the Dominican Minister and Senora de Pastoriza; Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Burke, she in a pretty black and white print frock; the Venezuelan Ambassador and Senora de Escalante, the Bolivian Minister and Senora de Guachalla, Mme. Ricardo Alfaro and her daughter, Mrs. Frank Weller, as well as another daughter, debutante Yolande Alfaro; the Czecho-Slovak Minister and Mme. Hurban, and the Minister of Uruguay, Jose Richiling.

Missed in the throng yesterday was the lively Senorita Erma Castillo Najera, who is convalescing from an appendectomy. The Chilean Ambassador and Senora de Cabero were there, she wearing a smart turquoise wool jacket over her black frock and pearl earrings; the Ambassador of Brazil and Senhora Martins, whose outfit was topped by a fetching hat covered with veiling outlined in sequins; Senorita Maria Elena Davila in a cocoa-colored sport frock, and Mr. and Mrs. Rogelio Alfaro.

Still others there were the Minister of Guatemala and Senora de Recinos, the Minister of Costa Rica and Senora de Castro Beeche, the Minister of Paraguay and Senora de Fernandez, Minister-Resident Counselor of the Mexican Embassy and Senora de Quintanilla, the Counselor of the Embassy and Senora de Fuentes and and the Assistant Military Attache of the Embassy, Lieut. Francisco Castillo Najero, jr.

Virginia Ball Brilliant Event

With descendants of Washington, Jackson and Lee taking part in the debutante figure, the Virginia Cotillion at the Army and Navy Country Club last evening fulfilled all expectations as a brilliant event. Debs from Virginia, Washington, Baltimore and New York attended. Quite the center of attention were Miss Mary Lee, great-granddaughter of Robert E. Lee, Miss Julia Jackson Preston, descendant of "Stonewall" Jackson, and Miss Nancy James Washington, collateral descendant of George Washington.

The figure was led by William E. Byrd, chairman of the floor committee, with Miss Lee, who wore a bouffant gown of light blue tulle, and Clement Ellis Conger, a direct descendant of Dennis Ramsay, a prominent citizen of Alexandria prior to the Revolution, with Miss Washington, whose gown also was a pastel blue shade, with fitted bodice of silver and crystal sequins and full skirt of a diaphanous material. Jack Scott was with Miss Nancy Weller, who wore white net with applique of white velvet water lilies, and Marshall Beverley was with Miss Margaret Gordon, who was gowned in white tulle with wide fitted girdle of silver and gold sequins. These four girls were presented with nosegays of red and white flowers at the start of the figure.

Nancy Goldsmith Becomes Engaged To H. L. Neugass

Mr. and Mrs. Ralph Goldsmith announce the engagement of their daughter, Nancy, to Herman Leo Neugass, of New Orleans, son of Mrs. Leo Neugass. The wedding will take place in the spring.

The bride-elect was graduated from George Washington University last year. She is a granddaughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Goldsmith, of Washington.

Guests, Mrs. Hurley, Mrs. Thomas Burke, Latin-Americans

at Mrs. Townsend's morning concerts in Washington, the hostess had a clever table arrangement representing the Pacific Ocean. Mr. Crooks recently returned from a trip to Honolulu, Australia, Samoa and other islands in the Pacific, and was awarded a doctor's degree by Rockefeller Foundation in recognition of his success on the trip.

Mme. Munthe de Morgenstierne, wife of the Minister of Norway, was the ranking guest at Mrs. Effingham L. Townsend's luncheon yesterday at the Mayflower following the concert. Others in her group were Mrs. Frederick Mitchell Gould, Mrs. Hollister Sturges, of New York; Mrs. William McClellan Ritter, Mrs. John Biddle, Mrs. Joseph S. Cecil, Mrs. Henry G. Writers Must Spread Understanding Among All, Mrs. Roosevelt Tells Club in Dinner Address

First Lady Observes There's Too Much To Do in the World for Any One to Be Purposeless in Advocating Real Service

By Jessie Ash Arndt
The Post Club Editor.

Writers have an obligation to acquaint people with each other and to awaken in them a desire to build a better world for the future than that in which we now live, Mrs. Roosevelt told members of the Professional Writers Club last night at their founders' day dinner.

Addressing a company of members and guests that filled Barker Hall of the Y. W. C. A. for the club's fourth anniversary party, she said there was "too much in the world to do for any of us to be purposeless very long."

"Our talent must minister not only to hours of ease," she said, "but to that within us which drives us to do something that the future may be better than the present in which we live."

Mrs. Roosevelt was introduced by Mrs. William Walter Smith, president of the club. She discussed "The Opportunities and Responsibilities of the New Writer in a Changing World."

Prejudices Are Cited As Needing Attention

Citing the need for understanding by people in one part of the country of the needs and problems of those in another—"as though they were our next-door neighbors," Mrs. Roosevelt urged that writers who had the talent should paint pictures of conditions which would bring them home to the whole Nation.

"We are full of prejudices," she said. "We think, as a nation, we believe entirely in liberty, but we are constantly having to check on ourselves to remember that we have a bill of rights. We find ourselves saying, 'I don't like what you are doing; I don't want to let you do it.'"

Overcoming these prejudices" will take a lot of work more than the writers can do—any talent anybody has to offer," she said.

She urged that those with talent for acquainting people wiht each other's needs, keep at it "over and over again until it becomes so much a thorn in the flesh that people go and do something about it."

Telling of a mother in the mountains of West Virginia who had related to her how one of her children had died after an illness during which she had been unable to get a doctor for him, Mrs. Roosevelt said she believed with Aubrey Williams that the American people did not deliberately turn their backs on conditions such as these. "It is because they do not understand," she said. "They don't believe things like that can really happen in our country."

The First Lady arrived at the dinner from the National Museum, where she had visited the "Tomorrow's Citizen" exhibit. Her gold lame gown harmonized with the blue and gold colors of the club that had been carried out in the decorations. As she entered the hall, there was only candle light—that of the yellow tapers burning on the tables and the little blue candles, one of which was at the place of each guest, lighting his individual piece of birthday cake.

Mrs. Taft Gives Views

It's going to be a long time before the United States has a woman President in the opinion of Mrs. Robert A. Taft, wife of the Ohio Senator who is seeking the Republican nomination. Mrs. Taft was interviewed yesterday afternoon in the home of President and Mrs. David Allan Robertson of Goucher College, in Baltimore before a tea at which she met Goucher juniors and seniors.

"I haven't heard any demand for a woman President, nor have I seen any woman scrambling for the job," Mrs. Taft said.

Mrs. Taft says that she is a good traveler and goes with her husband whenever possible. "I have been with him in 20 out of the 24 States he has visited since September," she added. Near the end of February, she will speak in Minnesota in the Senator's behalf.

Mrs. Taft expressed the opinion that the United States should go as far as is safe in extending aid to Finland, but should stop short of becoming involved in war.

"Our sympathies are definitely on Finland's side," she said, "and Finland deserves special consideration because Finland's attitude toward us has been different from other nations. My husband is in favor of a loan within reasonable limits."

G. O. P.'s Duty Is 'Balance,' Women Told

Mme. Cantacuzene Recalls Party's Founding On Constitutional Issue

The Republican Party has a responsibility for seeing that the balance between the three branches of government provided for by the Constitution is maintained, Mme. Cantacuzene told the League of Republican Women yesterday.

Mme. Cantacuzene, a former president of the league, addressed the February meeting at the Mayflower at which there were more than 300 present, a larger number than at any other regular session in some months. She was introduced by Mrs. Edward Everett Gann, the president, after the business meeting, and congratulated the women on the report of the treasurer, Miss Grace Burton. It showed that there was $3,000 in the treasury.

The Republican Party, said Mme. Cantacuzene, was based on a constitutional issue when it was founded, and is now called upon to do its part in upholding the provisions of the Constitution in the present contention for our institutions.

She pointed out the ways in which the "unbalancing" of the three branches of government—executive, judicial and legislative—would deprive the American people of their rights under the Constitution.

"The power is intended to lie with the people and not with the Government," she declared.

She urged the women to "go out and do something about it," suggesting to those who are citizens of the voteless District that they use their influence with friends throughout the country and that they secure copies of "good bills" before Congress and lend their support to them and bring to the attention of people the States' bills that should be opposed.

Church Unit Votes To Change Name

The executive committee of the Woman's Council of the Washington Federation of Churches has voted to change the name of the council from the Woman's Council of the Washington Federation of Churches to the Washington Council of Church Women. It functions as the woman's division of the Washington Federation of Churches and the local unit of the National Council of Church Women.

This change was considered necessary for purposes of simplification and the name corresponds in form to that of the national organization with which it is affiliated.

The council, of which Mrs. Frank A. Linzel is president, represents the united effort of Protestant church women in the capital to bring about a closer fellowship between the churches. By a program of spiritual and social uplift through the year, it seeks to serve the community in a more effective way than could be accomplished as individual church groups.

Traffic Tickets Are Adjusted In 162 Cases

Number Reaches Highest Weekly Total Since Publication Began

Police last week adjusted 162 traffic tickets, the highest weekly total since publication began more than three months ago under order of the Commissioners. Twenty-eight tickets were canceled, and 134 were suspended with warning.

Five motorists were excused through the intercession of high police officials, including Maj. Ernest W. Brown, the chief. Forty-seven pleaded illness, and 43 pleaded that their cars were disabled—mainly by weather. Three escaped through diplomatic immunity.

Possession of a "previous good record" was sufficient excuse for 24 parkers who violated ordinances. Six were pardoned because they were strangers in the city, and six pleaded successfully that their cars were pushed.

Signs Obscured

Herbert E. Davis, of 32 Farragut place northwest, escaped with a warning because he was "taking the census in the vicinity." David Kammerman, of 3700 Massachusetts avenue northwest, was warned because no-parking signs were obscured by advertising signs.

Charles F. Lofton, of 323 Elm street northwest, received a warning for leaving his car with its motor running. He told police that he locked the car door by mistake and couldn't get back inside since his key was in the switch.

Kendell Foss, of 2445 Fifteenth street northwest, was warned because a snow plough piled snow against his car and he was unable to move it in time. Charles W. Peckham, of 502 Eleventh street northeast, pleaded that the no-parking sign was hidden by snow, and he received a warning.

A letter to Maj. Brown brought a warning for Charles A. Conrad, of 2611 Adams Mill road northwest who pleaded that his battery went dead. Minnie H. Fredericks, of 200 Massachusetts avenue northwest, was warned with the notation: "Recommended by Maj. Brown; no previous record."

Keneippy's Request Granted

Traffic Inspector William E. Holmes recommended warnings in two cases—for Troy E. Hardman, of 1820 Clydesdale place northwest, at the request of George K. Keneipp; and for Ward H. Corbin, of 1637 A street northeast, at the request of W. J. Uline.

Thomas E. Dunham, of 2501 Calvert Street northwest, was warned, after a recommendation by Detective Inspector Bernard W. Thompson. Keneipp, who is secretary of the Keystone Auto Club, requested and was granted a warning for Henry K. Murphy, of 42 Rhode Island avenue, who parked overtime.

Ann Corio a Foster Mother? Orphanage Bars Actor Parents

The baby blanket Ann Corio, glamorous disrober, is crocheting will be of no use to her now. The Cradle won't let her adopt an orphan

It Isn't Because of Her 'Peculiar Art; Too Many Stars Seek Adoptions—Notifying Press First—Director Says

By International News Service

Evanston, Ill., Feb. 5.—Doors to the Cradle were closed tonight to stage and screen stars—all because of the reported intention of a New York strip teaser, Ann Corio, to adopt a baby from Evanston's famous foundling home.

Shattering a tradition of many years against discussing adoptions from her institution, Mrs. William Walrath, managing director of the orphanage, stated:

"We're not going to accept any more applications from stage and screen couples. We only ask for intelligent, loving parenthood, and the reasonable assurance of an income sufficient to care for our babies."

Altogether too many stage and screen celebrities have decided they would adopt an orphan from the Cradle—discreetly letting the press know about it well in advance, Mrs. Walrath declared.

As an afterthought, Mrs. Walrath said Miss Corio's "peculiar art" had nothing to do with the ban.

C. C. Swisher Educator, Traveler Dies

Professor Emeritus Of History Was 93; Once Worked for Diaz

Charles Clinton Swisher, 93, world traveler and emeritus professor of history at George Washington University, died Sunday in a Takoma Park (Md.) nursing home.

A native of Muncey, Pa., Prof. Swisher was educated at universities in this country and abroad including Yale, Columbia Law School, Cornell, the Universities of Paris, Berlin, and Heidelberg, Guadalajara University, Mexico, and Mount St. Mary's College.

After practicing law in New York City from 1881 to 1883, Mr. Swisher spent many years in Mexico in the development of coffee and cocoa plantations. Commissioned by President Diaz, he studied coffee production methods of Asia and the East Indies and the possibilities of introducing eucalyptus in Mexico.

He left Mexico when his publication of a history of religious orders in Mexico led to the confiscation of his land. The order was later rescinded but, suffering from yellow fever, he returned to this country in 1892.

Prof. Swisher taught history at George Washington from 1896 until his retirement in 1926. Since that time he had spent much time in traveling in Africa. His earlier travels took him to Europe, Asia, Alaska and South America.

Prof. Swisher was a member of the American Historical and Asiatic Associations, the Cosmos Club of this city and several European Alpine clubs. He lived here at 1810 Kalorama road northwest.

Thorvald Solberg's Books Damaged by $7,000 Fire

The three-story home of Thorvald Solberg copyright expert and bibliophile, at Mohican Hills, near Glen Echo, Md., was swept by fire yesterday, and most of Solberg's collection of valuable books and pictures was burned or damaged by water. Firemen estimated the damage at $7,000.

Solberg was on his way home to get some books to present to the Library of Congress when the fire started. Jean Perry, 11, daughter of his secretary, and Maryellen Enyart, 11, a neighbor's daughter, were reading in the library when they heard plaster falling.

Running upstairs to investigate, the children found the third floor in flames. They ran screaming from the house, accompanied by a colored maid, and gave the alarm at the Enyart home. The Glen Echo, Bethesda, and Cabin John fire companies battled with the flames more than an hour and a half.

Solberg, who retired in 1930 after 33 years of service as register of copyrights at the Library of Congress, received a letter yesterday from Archibald MacLeish thanking him for giving some of his books to the Library.

Arriving at the scene an hour after the fire was discovered, he ran into the burning building and rescued an armful of books. Firemen prevented him from returning to the flames, and the rest of his library was seriously damaged.

Solberg's house was burned several years ago, but the damage was less serious. He will live temporarily at the Cosmos Club, and may go to Florida while his home is being rebuilt.

Postlude

By Ray C. B. Brown

Mrs. Lawrence Townsend presents Rise Stevens, mezzo-soprano, and Richard Crooks, tenor, in the Mayflower Hotel ballroom Monday morning. Accompanists: Hans Georg Schick and Frederick Schauwecker.

Bringing to a close her season series of morning musicales in the Mayflower Hotel ballroom, Mrs. Lawrence Townsend presented yesterday Rise Stevens and Richard Crooks, American members of the Metropolitan Opera, in a thoroughly enjoyable recital. In her Washington debut, Miss Stevens made a favorable impression of artistry in the formative stage, while Mr. Crooks made his tenth appearance for Mrs. Townsend an occasion for beautifully finished singing. At the close of his second group, the tenor and his auditors were reminded of the anniversary by a file of ushers bearing gifts of tin.

Mr. Crooks was in splendid voice and at the top of his technical form. His control of tone, both in dulcet pianissimo and in robust volume, was never more finely displayed. The plasticity of his phrasing, the clarity of his tone and the purity of his diction were admirable, and his method of production proved that the style of bel canto is being safely preserved.

His first group contained "Sei mia gioia" from Handel's "Parthenope," Gluck's "O del mio dolce ardor," Respighi's "Stornellatrice" and Carissimi's "Vittoria, mio core," and he added Purcell's "Passing By" as an extra number. In his second group he offered two distinguished songs, "Blue Were Her Eyes," by Winter Watts, and "The Bell Man," by Wesley Forsyth, in company with Fox's "The Hills of Home" and an unfamiliar aria, "Pourquoi me reveiller," from Massenet's "Werther." Insistently recalled, he gave an exquisitely voiced reading of "Le Reve" from "Manon."

Endowed with a true mezzo-soprano voice of rich quality, Rise Stevens is one of our most promising native artists. Her musicianship shows intelligence and taste, and her versatility in interpretation reveals temperamental resources. She has not yet perfected an absolutely smooth gamut, and her diction suffers from blurred consonants. These flaws are remediable, and detract very little from the charm of her singing. She is at ease in both lyric and dramatic styles, and projects her songs with a winning eloquence.

In her first group she combined Handel's "Dove sei, amato bene," Mozart's "Voi che sapete," Marcello's "Quello fiamma che m'accende" and Gluck's "Cha faro senza Euridice." At her second appearance she sang Schubert's "Die Post," Wolf's "Verschwiegen Liebe," Ivor Klein's "A Christmas Folk Song," George Butterworth's "Roving in the Dew," John Michael Diack's Handelian parody, "Little Jack Horner," and Frank Bridge's "Love Went A-Riding."

Washington Chamber Music Society presents the Pro Musica String Quartet (Milton Schwartz, Jeno Sevely, Ralph Hersh and William Brennand) and Gertrude McRae Nash, pianist, Monday afternoon in Phillips Memorial Gallery. Program: String Quartet in D-flat major, Piano Quintet in C minor (Erno von Dohnanyi).

Phillips Memorial Gallery held a capacity audience yesterday afternoon when the Washington Chamber Music Society gave the last candlelight concert of the season. The program was devoted to the Hungarian composer, Erno von Dohnanyi, whose second string quartet and piano quintet occupied the twilight hour. The executants were Milton Schwartz, Jeno Sevely, Ralph Hersh and William Brennand, assisted by Gertrude McRae Nash. Their readings were spirited and interesting, being animated by an evidently sympathetic feeling for the music.

Influenced in his style by Schumann and Brahms, Dohnanyi carried on into the present century the traditions of romanticism. Save in one stage work, "The Tower of Voivod," he stood aloof from the nationalistic movement in Hungary, and there are very few traces in his music of folk idiom. His chamber music works are strict in form, technically expert in details of structure, and free from mannerisms. Although they reveal little originality, they sound effectively because of the vivacity of the writing.

The C minor quintet for piano and strings is his best work in this medium, for on it his individuality is most deeply stamped. It reveals a true vein of poetic fantasy and abounds in a humor of robust quality. Mrs. Nash handled the piano part with a competence auxiliary to the lively performance of her colleagues.

Musical Artists of America presents Katya Parker, soprano, in a song recital Monday evening in the Shoreham Hotel ballroom. Accompanist: Julia Elboger.

Russian songs in the original texts are so relatively rare on our programs that the first group in Katya Parker's recital in the Shoreham Hotel ballroom last evening came as a novelty to most of the auditors. A Russian-American soprano from California, Mrs. Parker has a clear diction that reveals the beauty of the Slavic tongue when put to lyric use, and one would have been pleased had she placed more of these songs on her program.

The most interesting of her selections was an aria from Chaikovski's "Charodeika," an opera utterly unknown in this country. It had a melodic charm characteristic of the composer and an appealing emotional urgency. In company with this unfamiliar aria were Rakhmaninov's "The Soldier's Bride," Dargomizhski's "The Cavaliers," Musorgski's "Little Star" and Grechaninov's "My Country."

The second group in French and Italian contained "Il est doux, il est bon" from "Herodiade," Louis Aubert's "Vieille Chanson Espagnole," Mascagni's "M'ama, non m'ama" and "Connais-tu le pays" from "Mignon." In the concluding group were songs by Ernest Charles, Bainbridge Crist, Danile Wolfe, Mana-Zucca, Coleridge-Taylor and Frank Waller.

Mrs. Parker, who has recently resumed an interrupted career in opera and concert, shows some uncertainties of tone production resulting from the interim. The tone itself has a clear and delightful quality in the low and middle registers. Its occasional unsteadiness can be remedied by breath control, as can the vibrato of her high notes. In phrasing and in tone shading she has artistry and taste, and her readings are emotionally cogent.

La Roe Hits Interference With ABC

Forest Hills Group Told Congressional Attitude Perils Its Independence

Independence of the Alcohol Beverage Control Board will be destroyed if the House District Committee calls the board's members on the carpet every time they refuse a liquor license, Wilbur LaRoe, jr., District Parole Board member, told the Forest Hills Citizens Association last night.

"If we are going to have a licensing system," he declared at a meeting at Ben W. Murch School, Thirty-sixth and Davenport streets northwest, "we should have a quasi-judicial board."

With the House District Committee acting as "supreme court, there is little hope the ABC Board can perform its functions to the best interests of Washingtonians," he added.

The association unanimously adopted a resolution asking the District Commissioners to "investigate the selling of liquor here."

Installation of a traffic light at Reno road and Nebraska avenue northwest was asked by the organization.

The group also voted support for national representation for Washington but opposed local suffrage.

Progressive-Georgetown

Construction of an apartment house at Wisconsin avenue and R streets northwest was opposed violently last night by the Progressive Citizens Association of Georgetown.

The proposed structure, it was said, would replace a private residence which formerly was occupied by the famous Dunbarton Tennis Club. The apartment house would cover an entire block.

Francis P. Sullivan, chairman of the Washington Chapter, American Institute of Architects, urged preservation of historic homes in Georgetown and asked the association to make a drive for restoration of old street names in the section.

Mrs. Lawrence Martin, chairman of the education committee, won the organization's approval for resolutions asking the Board of Education to provide an additional clerk for each junior high school and division of elementary schools.

Her proposal asking that more funds be provided for school gardens also won support.

Dupont Circle

Parking space for one car for each family in more than two-family dwellings should be provided in all future structures, the Dupont Circle Citizens Association voted yesterday.

Lieut. Arthur C. Belt, of the Third Police Precinct, told the organization that at least 12 more patrolmen and two more motorcyclemen are needed in the precinct.

Extra police, he said, are needed to handle rush-hour traffic, to safeguard school children and to control traffic at hotels during receptions.

The association also heard William Clark Taylor, attorney, ask for a Congressional investigation of the Department of Vehicles and Traffic here.

Taylor attacked the "stagger system" for regulating traffic lights and urged substitution of the block system of regulation.

He also drew attention to the time needed for the ordinary citizen to obtain a license from the Department of Vehicles and Traffic.

Manor Park

The commissioners should make amends for failure to request a deficiency appropriation to buy furniture for the new Calvin Coolidge High School by allotting $188,000 from available funds, the Manor Park Citizens Association declared last night.

The new building is scheduled to be opened next fall and there is a possibility, it was pointed out, that furniture and fixtures will not be ready at that time.

Seven of the 11 streets for which the association has requested repairs have been fixed, the meeting was told. In addition, $60,000 has been allotted for six other streets.

George A. Corbin was named chairman of a committee to arrange for the annual banquet to be given jointly with the Whittier Parent-Teacher Association. He will be assisted by Mrs. Corbin, F. Arthur Oehm, Mrs. Arthur Kriemelmeyer, John D. Smoot and Daniel B. Lloyd.

3 Hurt in Falls; 2 on Streets Here

Three persons were injured in falls yesterday. They were:

Thomas P. Bender, 10, 3404 E street southeast, who received a brain concussion when he fell in the 1600 block of Thirtieth street southeast.

Matthew Dallas, 72, 220 H street northeast, who suffered face and eye injuries in a fall at Ninth and G streets northwest.

Differences Safeguard Liberty, Says Speaker

Dr. John R. Fitzpatrick, Columbus University provost, urged an audience at Friendship House, 619 D street southeast, Sunday night to help "keep America safe for differences."

Diversification of interests in the United States—religious, racial, cultural—he held to be a bulwark of democracy. Dr. Fitzpatrick spoke in the second of a series of discussions on "Living Together In a Democracy."

'Tomorrow's Citizen' Show, Portraying Capital Condition, Starts With a Few Critical Words by Mechanical Voice

Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt last night commended the "Tomorrow's Citizen" exhibit sponsored by the social studies committee of the Washington branch of the American Association of University Women as "something every citizen of Washington should see."

Attending the opening of the exhibit at the National Museum, where many persons prominent in Government and civic life in the District were present, Mrs. Roosevelt added that "persons outside of Washington should come to see it, and then go home and have one like it."

The First Lady was shown through the dozen booths of the exhibit by Miss Margaret Klein, technical director of the display which shows housing, health and other conditions of civic life in Washington.

Robot Deplores Situation

The voice of a robot opened the exhibit discussing its aims, and declaring that "Washington does not as adequately meet the needs of its 650,000 citizens as it plays the role of the Nation's Capital."

In viewing the various booths, Mrs. Roosevelt commented on the decline in death rate from infectious diseases in the District shown in a series of charts, and expressed particular interest in models of "satisfactory homes." She commented on the striking qualities of a poster showing an elderly woman begging on the street and then sewing contentedly in a home, captioned "Not this—but—this."

Subjects covered by the exhibit were recreation, safety, health crime prevention, education, civic responsibility, labor, housing, public welfare and consumer problems. The Department of Labor, District agencies and local civic and welfare organizations are cooperating with the Washington Branch of the A. A. U. W. in the exhibit which will continue for three weeks.

Miss Anderson Receives

Receiving guests last night were Miss Mary Anderson, chief of the Woman's Bureau of the Labor Department; Senator William King, Mrs. William C. Van Vleck, president of the Washington branch of the A. A. U. W.; Representative Jennings Randolph, Miss Klein, and Commissioner Hazen.

The exhibits are open daily from 9 a. m. to 4:30 p. m., and on Sundays from 1 p. m. to 4:30 p. m. for the next three weeks. Tomorrow afternoon Director of Traffic William Van Duzer will be in charge of a special program at the Museum. The Camp Fire Girls of the Potomac Area will give a special program Friday at 8 p. m. Special programs will also be presented by the Goodwill Industries and the Labor Department Saturday at 10:30 a. m., 2 p. m., and 8 p. m.

Hostesses at last night's opening were:

Mrs. F. Norman Hearn, chairman; Mrs. Richard B. Barker, Mrs. Shelby Faulkner, Mrs. C. C. Fifield, Mrs. Lyle S. Garlock, Mrs. Albert B. Genung, Mrs. Gregory Hankin, Mrs. Charter Heslep, Mrs. Helen Duey Hoffman, Mrs. J. C. Phillips, Mrs. Karl Pribram.

The Man Pays

Disability Benefits Seizable as Alimony

Although the law exempts disability insurance benefits from attachment for ordinary debts, such benefits are liable to be sequestered to secure unpaid alimony, the District Court of Appeals ruled yesterday.

Deciding the question for the first time here, Justice Wiley Rutledge declared that the obligation of a husband to support his family "operates in sickness and in health."

Though a man is unable to work, said Jutice Rutledge, if he has other means he is required to apply them to performing his obligations. Congress never intended the exemption law to enable a man to keep his property from his dependents, the court added.

"That the disability income may be generous," Justice Rutledge commented, "only goes to make the purpose of exemption less plausible. That it may be meager does not establish such purpose. The duty is to share, not to desert, when trouble comes."

The court sent back to the District Court for a trial in conformity with its opinion the suit of Mrs. Anna Katherine Schlaefer, who contended Wallace Clayton Schlaefer fell behind on his alimony, although he received $100 a month from the Prudential Insurance Co. on a disability policy.

Chest Cites Record Total Of Donors

Willett Addresses 12th Annual Rally; Parker Praises Volunteers' Help

The largest number of donors ever to support a Community Chest campaign here, and the greatest total of agencies thus for associated for human welfare services in Washington were noted last night by Herbert L. Willett, jr., director of the Community Chest. He addressed the twelfth annual meeting, attended by contributors, board members, volunteer workers, and agency representatives in the United States Chamber of Commerce Building.

A group of 134 trustees recommended by the nominating committee was elected. A group of 134 other trustees appointed to represent the 67 member agencies of the Chest brought the total number to 268.

Pointing out that "the Chest enters 1940 with a fine record behind it," Willett declared, "But no one should have a feeling of complacency. There are many more steps to take. We are far from meeting all the needs that are our rightful responsibility."

Jennings Gives Praise

The president of the Chest, Coleman Jennings, emphasized the "honored place" that trained social workers on the staffs of Chest agencies have earned in the community. He also praised the "ungrudging and sacrificial effort of the volunteers, without which there could not be a Chest."

A dramatization entitled "Clouds Over Washington," by Mrs. David Kushner, was presented by a cast of Washington Civic Theater players. Around the theme that a successful Community Chest campaign goal has not been attained in many years here, the single scene of the play took place on a mythical "cloud" over the city to which goddesses summoned Washington citizens to give their testimony.

Campaign Chairman Chauncey G. Parker, jr., paid tribute to the thousands of volunteer workers and their efforts in the last campaign.

Normality Is Ideal

"The Chest ideal is that life shall not be merely a happy and gratifying thing for a chosen few," he declared, "but that life in so far as possible shall be a life of normality, protection, growth and development for the largest possible number.

"The coming campaign, with the normal disturbances of an election year added to the tragic business abroad, will come as a challenge to all of us."

By November, 1939, the organization had collected 90 per cent of total pledges, Treasurer John A. Reilly reported. Budgets of member agencies for the full 12 months were thus guaranteed, with the result that the December collections could become "the safeguard required by good administration," he said.

Director Willett pointed out in his report that in numbers of givers per thousand of population "Washington is near the top of the list of American cities." A charting of campaign results for the past 12 years shows that "newcomers to Washington and new Chest supporters are not giving in proportion to the standard set by the first 100,000 contributors, he said.

Following the meeting, a reception was held honoring the newly elected and appointed trustees.

His mother, Mrs. Sam Kliegman, told police she had fed Ryne milk before putting him to sleep on the front porch of 3640 Park place northwest, where she was visiting.

Dr. David L. Weinstein, of 452 Newton place northwest, said the baby apparently died when he failed to digest the milk. First aid treatment by the rescue squad failed.

Judge Gassaway Urges Boys Clubs In Montgomery

Lack of recreational facilities is a major reason for juvenile delinquency in Montgomery County, Judge John G. Gassaway, of the Rockville Juvenile Court, told the Silver Spring Women's Democratic Club last night at Jesup Blair Community House.

Judge Gassaway said he believed establishment of boys' clubs throughout the county would help decrease crimes by youth. He suggested the clubs be formed separate from any school jurisdiction in order to attract the minors most needing guidance and fellowship.

Parents should not allow children to have autos unless the children can afford to maintain them, the judge said. Otherwise, he warned, there is the temptation to steal gasoline and auto parts.

He urged that children be given spending allowances and religious training.

Tubercular Fund Denial Is Criticized

Coulter Accuses D. C. Association Of Seeking Mainly To Perpetuate Self

In turning down the request of Health Officer Ruhland for supplementary personnel funds of $11,300 the District Tuberculosis Association forced "great hardship" on the Health Department's tuberculosis clinic, Dr. A. Barklie Coulter, the department's tuberculosis director, said yesterday.

Dr. Ruhland renewed his request for funds to employ clerical assistants at the clinic after his original request had been cut Tuesday by the association's board of directors to $1,200. The executive committee Saturday upheld the board.

"I am not surprised by this 'Document of Self-Justification' released by the executive committee of the District Tuberculosis Association," said Dr. Coulter, referring to a statement issued after its meeting by the committee, "as there is only one person on this committee who has had any formal training in tuberculosis control, and he (Dr. J. Winthrop Peabody) voted for the slash at the directors' meeting.

Sees No Logical Basis

"I am surprised that the executive committee does not realize that their whole demonstration process, so-called, has now no logical basis with the forced curtailment of the Bureau for Tuberculosis' activities. There can be no lasting rehabilitation without proper medical supervision—no lives are saved in tuberculosis by health education while the active case roams at will—and the so-called 'tuberculosis camp' went out with the health schools as a medium of control in tuberculosis, but still functions in certain cities as a source of advertisement to collect money from the unsuspecting public.

"In my opinion, it is not the Tuberculosis Association that has been generous to the Health Departmnt—it is the public that has been generous too long to an association whose principal object seems to be self-perpetuation."

Ingratitude Charged

After its meeting Saturday, the association's executive committee listed its contributions to Health Department tuberculosis work and observed:

"The association now finds itself not only unappreciated for its past generosity, but under pressure and actual attack for not abandoning such part of its regular program as might be necessary in order to grant cash subsidied to the Health Department."

Dr. Ruhland had asked the $11,300 to supplement funds appropriated by the District government for tuberculosis work by the department.

The Washington Post Sports

18 WASHINGTON: TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 6, 1940 X*

Lower Class Leagues Must Stay, He Says

Washington Club President to Fight For C, D Leagues; Against Subsidies

By the Associated Press

Orlando, Fla., Feb. 5.—Clark Griffith, shrewd owner-president of the Washington Nationals, agreed today with Kenesaw M. Landis that the present baseball farm system often is an "evil," and then lambasted the commissioner's methods of meeting the problem.

He defended the system's right to existence and asserted emphatically he would fight to the last ditch against any attempt to kill class C and D leagues, the "life's blood of American baseball."

"I agree with Commissioner Landis that the manner in which some farm clubs are run can be, and is, an evil. But until Landis can advance some concrete proposal that will allow the class D leagues to flourish, I'll fight to the last breath," the 70-year-old Griffith said.

Modify Point 5

"I do not believe that Mr. Landis realized fully the far-reaching effects to point five in his first declaration. I believe that he will further modify it and that, in time, some proposal will be brought forward to clear the picture.

(Point five covers working agreements. The essence of its wording would prevent Charlotte, a Washington farm, from giving aid to the Orlando Class D Club unless Charlotte owned Orlando outright.)

"That point five in the proposal got baseball up in the air, for there is no minor league team that is self-supporting. Even the Class AA clubs have to get help from the majors once in a while.

"Class D leagues are always in need of help. One or two clubs in a Class D league might make money some years, but there isn't a Class D league in the country that will balance the slate when an audit is made at the end of the season."

Against Subsidies

Griffith was just as dead set against the Commissioner's proposal that subsidies be granted to minor league clubs.

"It is utterly ridiculous to think that a class D club could operate on a subsidy of $1,000 a season; or a class C league on a subsidy of $1,500, or a class B on $2,000. That is impossible—the amount would be just a drop in the bucket.

Redskins' Backfield Star Talks Indian, Signs His Right Name

Haight Meets Farkas, Becomes Better Man

Redskin Star's the Kind of Fellow You'd Want Kid Brother to Be, Race Writer Opines; Andy Wants No Credit for His Success

By Walter Haight

I've been chasing Andy Farkas for two days. So if this piece is written in short, snappy sentences, please excuse. I'm out of breath and long words. I finally caught the Redskins' star back. But it was only because he waited an hour for me.

I banged into the Redskins' office, stuck my head over the Mannerheim Line that serves as a counter and yelled "Is Andy Farkas around?"

"He's here," was the welcome answer from Jack Espey, the little man with the big job of general managing the pro team.

I wobbled into the main office. What a sight! Tables were strewn all over the place. Chairs were in a tangled pile in the corner. Papers littered the floor. The place was a shambles.

Knowing as I do the stickler for neatness that is Espey, I could draw only one conclusion. Andy Farkas WAS there. So the hard-running, rough-and-tough Farkas was a wild man off the field, too. No weakling could have turned that room into a junk shop.

I looked at Espey, shrugged my shoulders and asked, "Farkas?"

Tries Mental Picture

That was a relief. It would have been the height of something or another to chase a man for two days, find him and then start running the other way.

"Andy's over in the laundry office writing a letter. I'll get him," said Espey smiling.

I had never met Farkas. Of course, I had seen him in action. In the minute that I waited for him, I tried to make a mental picture of the 23-year-old boy who has captured the hearts of thousands of football fans. A college man, yes, but I had seen those college football players who talk out of the side of their mouth. He had to be large. At least he had looked rather stocky in uniform. He had to be rough, too. A fellow can't give and take like those pros do without getting a bit callous. And he probably was loud.

No Knuckle-Crusher

The noise of the laundry machinery halted my train of thought. Through the door came Andy Farkas followed by Espey. Or was it Farkas? This young man looked more like the captain of the Roosevelt High tennis team than a professional football player.

At Espey's introduction, we shook hands.

He took a firm grip of my palm, but there was none of the overemphasis that I have received at Turner's Arena from a bantamweight boxer trying to impress me with his strength. No knuckle-crusher is this Farkas. In fact, he looked me in the eyes, almost bowed, and said in a soft voice, "Walter, it's a pleasure to know you." There wasn't the slightest doubt about it.

Now I don't want to convey the idea that Andy Farkas is a combination of the Super-Man and Little Lord Fauntleroy. But he is a darned good football player and a gentleman—the kind of a fellow you would want your kid brother to be.

"Get Haight," Says Haight

While I had been tracking down Andy, I had been wondering what kind of a picture I could get for the paper. When I finally cornered him, along with The Post photographer, the problem of just how to

Maroons 4th Period Rally Ties Score

Mulvihill's Basket In 30 Seconds of Overtime Period Gives Purple Victory

Staging an overtime finish which left the spectators limp as Monday's wash, Gonzaga High eked out a 24-22 overtime victory over Tech yesterday on the loser's court.

It was Bob Mulvihill, blond 15-year-old guard, who took a pass from Lane O'Donnell after 30 seconds had elapsed in the overtime period and dropped the ball through the cords to spell defeat for the gallant Maroon.

But it was Tech's great uphill fight in the last quarter which forced the overtime game which brought joy to the Tech fans. It was young Marshall Dellinger who starred as Tech dug itself out of a 20-13 deficit at the three-quarter point and commenced a drive halted only by the final whistle.

Gonzaga appeared certain winners as late as the fourth quarter. Lane O'Donnell and Mulvihill paced a third quarter attack which upped the Purple's lead from a 12-11 halftime margin in a 20-13 advantage at the end of three quarters.

But Gonzaga supporters cheered too soon, as it developed, for the Maroons came back with a vengeance in the fourth quarter, to score seven consecutive points to tie the score at 20 to 20 before Franney Counselman was able to score for Gonzaga. Even then, Conzaga appeared victorious, for only one minute remained, but ten seconds later Dellinger sank a "snowbird" to force the game into overtime.

An interesting sidelight of the game was that not one shot was completed beyond the free throw circle. Close guarding put a premium on set shooting, necessitating quick breaks and snappy passing.

Dodgers Sign Cullenbine for $25,000 Bonus

Brooklyn Outbids Seven Other Clubs For Ex-Detroit Star

By the United Press

New York, Feb. 5.—The Brooklyn Dodgers paid $25,000—$1,923.07 a letter—for a ballplayer's autograph today.

The money was handed over to Roy Cullenbine, a tall, curly haired outfielder of 25, after he scratched his name on a Dodger contract.

Cullenbine was one of the 91 players made free agents by Commissioner K. M. Landis' recent decision against the Detroit Tiger farm system. Last week another of those emancipated stars, Infielder Benny McCoy was given $45.000 by the Philadelphia Athletics for his John Hancock.

Cullenbine, eleventh of a line of outfielders who now are on the Dodger roster, signed for one year and will receive $5.000—the same wages he received when he worked for Detroit last year. The $25,000 was a bonus for joining the Dodgers after passing up invitations from the Browns, Giants, Bees, Pirates, Reds, Indians and Senators.

Rejoins Wife

After receiving the check, Cullenbine flew back to his wife and 4-month-old baby in Detroit.

"Brooklyn was my choice all along," Cullenbine said as he revealed he had received offers from seven other clubs.

Cullenbine played 25 games for Detroit in 1938 and 75 last year when he batted .240.

"But I feel I can do better with Brooklyn," he said. "A lot of things had me down last year. My wife's health worried me and I was 15 pounds underweight. Now I'm back up to 192 and expect to get down

Blair Defeats Johnny Five On Long Goal

Bacon's Midcourt Basket Wins, 32-30; Munhall, Corrado Star

St. John's had victory within its grasp but saw it fade in the closing minutes as Montgomery-Blair's Jimmy Bacon sank a long, looping toss from the center of the floor to give his mates a 32-30 victory over the Johnnies basketball team last night in the Blair gym.

It was a seesaw battle for the lead throughout, with the Johnnies taking a narrow 18-16 advantage at the half.

The victory, avenging the Johnnies' 50-34 rout of Blair on the St. John's court, was made especially sweet by the defensive work which completely bottled up Frank Cady, who set a record for the Saints in the recent triumph by scoring 27 points. Cady was held to a scant seven points—all scored in the first half.

In a preliminary, the St. John's junior varsity defeated the Blair jayvees, 20-16.

Gonzaga Hero Gets 'Dutch Rub'

This Morning

Without Shirley Povich

(During Shirley Povich's vacation his column is being written by other members of the sports staff.)

By Al Hailey.

It won't be long now before a group of husky young men—beefy football players, mind you—will group themselves under such expressive names as the "Daisies," the "Petunias," the "Violets" the "Roses," the "Pansies," and other such at George Washington University and begin cavorting on the gymnasium floor in something that will vaguely resemble basketball.

HAILEY

Even the erudite faculty members will take a hand in the proceedings, and the results will be a brand of basketball worse than lousy but a lot of fun to all parties concerned.

There's no cause for alarm, however, for these goings-on will be quite in order. They will merely mark the opening of G. W.'s famed "Flower League," a highlight of the university's little-publicized but highly active intra-mural sports program. The "Flower League" has a peculiar attribute in that it is largely for members of the varsity football team and for the more athletically-inclined members of the physical education faculty, known as the "Brain Trusters."

George Washington's "Flower League" is an off-shoot of the unusual situation at the university which is thickly populated with day and night students clamoring for some form of athletic activity and which has few facilities for fulfilling the demand.

Small Gym Is Never Idle

In the fall and spring with student tourneys running in soccer, softball, golf, tennis, touch football and baseball, the intra-mural program is more easily handled, but right now—with basketball and badminton coming to the forefront—it's something like trying to put a jigsaw puzzle together, Director of Athletics Max Farrington will tell you.

G. W. has but one gymnasium—it is hoped that a new and larger structure, now in blueprint form only, will be standing in 1942, but the problem now is so acute that from 7:30 a. m. until 11 o'clock at night, there's never a dull moment in the Colonial gymnasium.

The situation in the Colonial gym will be closely akin to that of rush hour in Grand Central Station when students return to work for the second semester Friday and plunge into the expansive intra-mural basketball and badminton tournaments next week. Farrington keeps track of what's going on at all times in the gym with a large blackboard graph covering a 5-foot square of wall in his office, for one miscue doubtless would have the "Pansies" and the "Daisies" disputing possession of the floor with half a dozen other teams of irate basketball or badminton enthusiasts.

"We are extremely fortunate in having so many Government fields available for our outdoor program," Farrington said. Golfing tourneys at G. W. usually hold forth on East Potomac, handball is conducted in the Y. M. C. A., softball and touch football take place on the polo gounds, and tennis matches are left to the discretion and ingenuity of the competitors. Often, however, Government courts are rented.

Remolding Coeds Begins

The fraternity leagues are supervised by a fraternity council, just as an intra-mural board oversees the program for nonfraternity men.

This year the university is branching out with a fairly new venture in the intra-mural program—co-recreation. The women's program, operated by the Department of Physical Education for Women, has attempted to do everything from give instruction in "how" to perform the favorite sport to provide experience on competitive teams and in tourneys on the campus and with nearby colleges. Guidance in "remolding" the figure under trained supervision was another aim.

For women there is golf, tennis, swimming, archery, riding, rifle, canoeing, ice skating, fencing, as well as basketball and badminton.

The co-recreation idea is to get the older men and women students working together in athletic pursuits both appreciate.

"We believe that if we can help them find some form of recreation they both enjoy that we have taken a big step toward enabling them to insure their future happiness and making more permanent and congenial adjustments in picking their husbands and wives," Farrington explains.

The point about George Washington's intra-mural program is its bigness—its necessity for providing for both day students who do nothing else but go to school and for those who are employed in the Federal departments by day and who attend the university by night.

The athletic heads at G. W., working year after year to improve and enlarge the intra-mural program as an activity for the benefit of the participants, rather than spectators, are especially anxious to impress on these Government-employed students that there's a place for them, too, in the interclass and co-recreational activities.

Gentle to be Full-Time Track Coach at A. U.

Former Pennsylvania Star Athlete's Appointment Another Step in College's 'Big-Time' Policy in Athletic Program

Continuing its policy of going big-time in athletics, American University yesterday announced the one-year appointment of Robert E. Gentle, former star athlete at Pennsylvania, as full-time track coach, effective immediately.

In revealing his choice as the Eagles' first full-time track instructor, director of athletics Stafford H. Cassell announced that A. U. has arranged its most ambitious schedule.

According to tentative plans the Eagle thin-clads will compete in the Fifth Regiment meet at Baltimore, in the Catholic University meet at Brookland and in the Penn Relays at Philadelphia—in addition to the annual Mason-Dixon Conference event at Baltimore and several dual meets.

Prospects Bright

Gentle, employed by a local insurance firm since his graduation from Penn in 1931, has had no previous coaching experience but he said last night he believed he could develop a winning team for the uptown school.

"Prospects are heartening," he said. "Practice was started last Wednesday, and 14 candidates turned out. I expect about 11 more to complete a squad of 25. Among these boys are several promising runners and hurdlers. Inasmuch as A. U. didn't have a real track coach last year I think they did remarkably well."

Captain at Penn

Gentle, 31 years old and the father of two girls, captured the Pennsylvania football team and represented the Quakers' team in the hurdles and dashes. As a schoolboy at Brookline (Mass.) High he established a world's record of six seconds for the 45-yard high hurdles on a clay track.

At Pennsylvania he learned his track from Lawson E. Robertson, United States Olympic Coach and one of the best informed track authorities in the world.

Unless the illness which last night confined him to his home becomes worse, Gentle will assume his new duties at American University today. He will immediately get down to work with time trials to determine what four men will represent A. U. in the Mason Dixon Conference 1-mile relay in the Fifth Regiment games Saturday.

Manor Given District Golf Title Tourney

Event Scheduled Sept. 17-20, Open To All Amateurs

By Merrell W. Whittlesey

Plans for an elaborate and expansive District amateur championship were made at the twenty-sixth annual meeting of the District Golf Association last night at the University Club and the tournament, now open to all local amateurs, was awarded to Manor Country Club.

Ralph S. Fowler, former president of the organization, proposed, the tournament be opened to all club members, regardless of handicaps, and his recommendation to have five or six flights of play was later raised to seven by Roy K. Aten, of Capital. A tournament dinner will follow the affair, listed for September 17 to 20. The dinner will be on the 21st. Adequate prizes will be awarded and the entry fee kept to a minimum.

The District Junior championship will be played June 26-28 at Woodmont and the Mixed Scotch Foursome July 16 at Columbia. A move to increase the age limit in the junior was defeated. The mixed event will be played in the summer, instead of on the previous late fall dates that kept down the entries.

Keilty New Head

Dr. Robert A. Keilty, Congressional, took over the head office, succeeding D. D. L. McGrew, Burning Tree. Dr. Paul M. Stewart, Columbia, and Dr. A. Thomas Utz, Indian Spring, the nominating committee's choice for first and second vice presidents, respectively, were approved as was Dr. W. C. Barr for the secretary's post, as has been the custom for the past 25 years.

Robert Stead, jr., Chevy Chase, chairman of the nominating committee, announced an executive committee for 1940 of Harry G. Pitt, Manor; A. S. Bain, Kenwood; Al Steinem, Woodmont, and Ralph Fowler, Washington, as well as the out-going president.

The Quantico (Va.) Officers' Club bid for membership in the organization was unanimously approved by the members, and the club becomes the fifteenth member of the D. C. body.

Stead Gets Office

Robert Stead was appointed to the sectional affairs committee of the United States Golf Association a new position for a member of the D. C. Golf Association. The U. S. G. A. is making a bid for 100 per cent membership on the sectional board.

The Chevy Chase Club was again the only one to place a bid for an invitation tournament, and the annual play for the Taft and Sherman trophies will be held May 15-16-17, again restricted to 14 handicap golfers and with a $5 entrance fee.

The executive committee will take up a plan to hold a series of "dub" team matches for the golfers unable to make the first teams and still anxious to play in intra-club affairs. Whether they will be round-robin or elimination and the handicaps will be decided later.

Hit After Bell, Boxer Suffers Serious Injury

Austin, Minn., Feb. 5 (AP).—Luverne Pike, 17-year-old Brownsdale, Minn., amateur boxer, won his fight but he may never know it.

Competing in a Golden Gloves tournament, Pike was knocked out after the bell rang at the end of the first round. Leo Hoveland, Albert Lea, Minn., his opponent, started a punch he couldn't stop. Pike won, therefore, on a foul.

That was Saturday night. Today he was unconscious, victim of a brain concussion, and a physician said his condition was serious. The boys were featherweights.

Colonial Five Choice Over Wayne Tonight

Wayne University will be a slight underdog to George Washington in their basketball game at 8:30 tonight at Tech gym, but is conceded an excellent chance of scoring an upset.

The fourth Midwestern team to play the Colonials this season, the Tartars will be striving to become that section's third winner over Bill Reinhart's team.

Wayne, a big, fast club, presently is in the midst of an Eastern trip, which so far has been 100 per cent successful. After beating Buffalo Saturday, Wayne stopped off at Frederick last night to defeat Mount St. Mary's, 49 to 42.

Wayne's record is six victories and four defeats, three of which were suffered by margins of three points or less. Among Wayne's victims are such strong teams as Oregon and Iowa. Two of their three points or less conquerors are Marquette and Utah.

George Washington, having rebounded strongly from its defeat by Army to defeat strong Virginia, now has a record of 9 triumphs in 12 starts.

In a 7 o'clock preliminary the undefeated George Washington frosh met George Washington High School, of Alexandria.

Another Wisconsin Basketball Player Ruled Ineligible

Madison, Wis., Feb. 5.—Ted Strain, of Sycamore, Ill., regular guard on the University of Wisconsin basketball team, was declared ineligible today for further varsity competition pending a ruling on his mid-year grades by the faculty executive committee.

Coach Harold Foster, who lost three players last week because of scholastic deficiencies, announced that Strain received passing marks in all courses, but that his average was low.

Elimination of Strain raised to 24 the number of varsity athletes who were dropped from squad rosters by faculty action.

G. W. Discloses Full Baseball, Net Schedule

First Buff Nine in Three Years to Play 15 Games; 11 Tennis Dates Set

Fifteen baseball games and 11 tennis matches have been scheduled for George Washington teams this spring, Director of Athletics Max Farrington announced yesterday.

Last year G. W. sponsored an ambitious freshman program, with Morris as coach, and the nucleus of the current varsity will be composed of sophomores. Georgetown, Maryland, Washington and Lee, Navy, Dartmouth and Temple are outstanding on the schedule.

The tennis schedule is also topped by Georgetown and Maryland. Michigan, Washington and Lee, Temple and Pittsburgh are other noteworthy matches.

Illinois Athletic Body Delays Action In Thomas Case

By the Associated Press

Chicago, Feb. 5.—The Illinois State Athletic Commission approached the end of its investigation of "fixed" fight charges by Heavyweight Harry Thomas today without any indication of what—if any—action would be taken.

The commissioners had planned to announce their conclusions this afternoon, but instead issued a formal statement saying "last-minute developments" made it necessary to study the whole transcript of four previous hearings and to consider all possibilities of jurisdiction and power of subpena.

Thus, a decision in the case involving affidavits Thomas made to the Chicago Tribune on October 30 that he "laid down" in fights with Max Schmeling in New York and Tony Galento in Philadelphia was delayed indefinitely.

War Refugee On Rassle Card

Another refugee from a war-torn European country will enter the local wrestling wars Thursday night at Turner's Arena—John Judiski, an import from Poland.

Judiski left Warsaw during the hail of lead from German guns, Promoter Joe Turner claims. He will be matched against rather less dangenerous opposition Thursday, Tommy Rae.

Lou Plummer and Don Evans return in the feature, and Joe Cox an Alan Eustace will trip through the semifinal.

Virginia Routs N. C. U., 44 to 25

Danville, Va., Feb. 5 (AP).—Armand Feldman led the University of Virginia basketball team to a 44-to-25 victory over the University of North Carolina quint here tonight.

Feldman ran wild through the first 30 minutes of play, scoring 17 points to give the Cavaliers a 23-to-13 half-time lead. He added five more points before leaving the game about halfway through the last period.

Les Scarsella's Wife Succumbs, Victim of Crash

Danville, Ky., Feb. 5 (INS).—Mrs. Les Scarsella, wife of the Boston Bees' first baseman, died late today of injuries suffered earlier in an automobile accident near Danville.

Mrs. Scarsella's niece also was killed in the crash.

Scarsella, his wife and niece were en route from Cincinnati to Florida, where he was to enter spring training. Scarsella was a member of the Cincinnati Club until traded to the Bees.

Apostoli Leaves Hospital; Plans Return to Ring

New York, Feb. 5 (AP).—Former Middleweight Champion Fred Apostoli was discharged today from the hospital where he was taken Friday night after being stopped in 12 rounds by Melio Bettina, of Beacon, N. Y., in Madison Square Garden.

His condition was satisfactory, his manager, Larry White, said, and the congestion in his chest, the result of an attack of grippe, had disappeared. There was no evidence of a brain concussion, which had at first been feared.

White said Apostoli, on leaving the hospital, had insisted he would return to the ring in "six months or so."

"But," the manager added, "I'm still telling him he should quit. I hope I can change his mind about fighting again."

Anacostia Invades Roosevelt; Western Plays Central Five Today

Two Games Scheduled At Roosevelt

Western Must Win To Hold Fourth Spot From Eastern; Riders Favored

Anacostia High, last in the inter-high basketball series but still in there scrapping, will be the first of two public school opponents this week for Roosevelt, the league leader, today in the opening half of a double-header at Roosevelt gym. Starting time is 3:30.

The final clash will bring together Western and Central, a pair of clubs battling for third place. Central holds the position at present with two victories and a loss, while Western is one notch farther down with one victory and two losses. A Western triumph will deadlock the teams for third, but a Western loss will drop the Raiders out of the select "first four" which will take part in the inter-high round robin tournament at the end of the season. Eastern, the defending champ, would then take undisputed fourth.

Roosevelt's triumph over the Indians, barring the sudden collapse of the leaders, is almost a certainty. In their four games to date the Riders have walked over Central, Tech and Eastern, two of which teams were responsible for two of Anacostia's three setbacks.

The Central-Western affair, however, is as near a toss-up as inter-high hostilities have afforded. The teams have turned in exactly opposite records, Central dropping its first game and winning the next two, and Western winning its first and losing the last two.

Despite its poor showing of late, Western seems to have the better chance of winning. Both its defeats were by strong clubs—Wilson and Roosevelt—and its individual players are slightly more polished than Central's. In Irvin Schenker, Jimmy Karas and Johnny Lumpkin the Raiders boast a trio as strong as any in the series. These players are ably assisted by Hal Mitchell, Jake Hilleary and Hop Perrell.

Central's hopes will be with Harry Martin, injured veteran recently returned to the squad, Sam Di Blasi, Charley Kligman, Jim Mandes, Benny Steiner, Teddy Thomaides and Moe Bisker.

Banneker Five Loses, 65-46, To Va. State

The Collegians from Virginia State, Petersburg, defeated the Banneker Recreation five last night in Banneker gymnasium, 65—46. Sidat-Singh, Recreation forward, led the scoring with 21 points, but it was "Poison" Percy Smith who brought the crowd of 1,400 to their feet.

The Virginians were away to an early lead, Weeks and Brown showing the way, but the Banneker quint collected a basket each, and 2 points by the foul route, to bring the count to 13-12. It was the closest score of the game, four baskets by Weeks, in rapid succession, giving the Old Dominion crew a lead which was maintained throughout.

Smith closed the game with brilliant shots from every angle of the court, outshining the clever Singh, who gained but scanty support from his comrades.

Federal Bureau of Investigation bowed to the Jewish Community Center's Big Five in a Heurich Amateur Basketball League game at Heurich Gymnasium last night, 38 to 32.

FBI was leading at half, 16-12, but was headed in the stretch.

Kummer, of Q. & S. Laundry, scored 27 points, 1 less than the Heurich gymnasium record set by Gerald Burns, as his team routed Garvin's Grill, 49-29. United Clay Products nosed out the Bantams, 43-39.

This Quartet Will Run for Central in Regiment Games

Central High Trackman in Feature 660

Babe Hayden Given Chance in Maryland Games Saturday

For the first time in the six-year history of the Maryland U.-Fifth Regiment games in Baltimore Saturday night, a Washington schoolboy has an above average chance of winning the Governor's 660, feature of the high school portion of the program.

That boy is "Babe" Hayden, spindley young cinderman of Central High. The middle distance star, only D. C. schoolboy to rate an invitation this year, and the first District lad to get a bid in the last three years, can do it if he's "right," according to Coach Hardy Pearce.

"Hayden," Pearce said yesterday, anxiously peering at his stop watch as the little flash came tearing by, "has improved so much this year that I'm practically positive he will win or push some other runner to a record. The best time "Babe" turned in in 1939 was 1:37, and already he's doing 1:31 this season.

"The record for the Governor's 660," Pearce continued, "is 1:27. The way I look at it, if the kid can do 1:31 around our halls—where we're forced to practice, due to the dampness of our indoor track—then he certainly ought to knock 5 seconds or so off that on a regulation track. Remember, a youngster must take 14 turns to go 660 yards here."

In all, 11 men will represent the Blue and White in Baltimore Saturday night. Pearce's brightest hope, besides Hayden, is the relay team with which he took third place at the meet last season. Johnny Bredbenner, Jim Zuppa, Clayton Norris and Jim Porter will probably comprise the quartet, though young John Thomas and Bill Edgerton are capable runners.

Zuppa, star of interhigh dashes last season, will also be entered in the 70-yard dash, along with Fred Dunn, a converted footballer. The high jump entry will be Art Brassie, and two youngsters—Russ Lamar and Bruce Aaron—will be in there fighting in the 1,000-yard race.

League Gives Gold Medal

For winning all eight of its matches in the last three months the first team of the Washington Pistol Club last night was presented with a gold medal by the Washington Pistol League.

The Washington Pistol Club proved itself the class of a league including eight other teams. The Park Police squad finished second, and Internal Revenue third.

Members of the winning club are John Cash, David Lockling, J. J. Duffy, Ralph Glaize and William Welsh. Cash's average of 272.2 per 300 shots placed him first among league individual and earned him a medal.

High scorers of the other teams were Cleary, Park Police; Ross, Internal Revenue; Gibson, Washington Pistol Club No. 2; Pedersen, Federal Works Agencies Police; Mackey, Twelfth Precinct Civilians; Burdette, Procurement Division, Treasury; Lehming, Interior Department, and Sample, Bureau of Engraving.

A. U. Jayvees Rout Devitt, 35-18

American University's basketball jayvees staged a second half defensive exhibition yesterday and ran up a 35-to-18 victory over Devitt Prep in the A. U. gymnasium. Archie Norford, center, set the pace with 14 points. The Prep quintet was held to six points in the final period.

On the Line

With CONSIDINE

New York, Feb. 5.—If he doesn't get too fresh, Arturo Godoy, the mild Bull of the Pampas, has a fair chance of going the limit with Joe Louis Friday night at the Garden. He is built as solidly as Tommy Farr, is as hard to tip over, and when last seen here he was numb enough to brush aside as inconsequential the same Galento hooks which staggered Louis and knocked him down.

CONSIDINE

Of course he has no chance to win. The greatest triumph he can reasonably look forward to is to be upright—no matter how much he resembles a bad traffic accident—at the end of the 15th round. His best chance of achieving that heady goal is to protect himself, and inspire in Louis the same vague misgivings which Farr inspired in the champ. Farr did it by offering the thick dome of his skull as a landing place for Joe's early punches. It hurt Joe's hands, and when he was sure of that Tommy charged him with a mauling, pushing, grapling, bully-boy rush that threw Louis' exquisite timing out of gear.

Godoy fights like that. Or at least he fought like that the last time he was here. Nobody knows just what has happened to him in the interim, except that he opened a saloon, got married and dropped a decision or two.

Its Curtains if Arturo Gets Careless

Louis could beat him without ever using a knockout punch. He could stand back there and pop him 10,000 times with that jarring, snakey jab and win every round. He is one of the all time masters in that department, about which you hear so little. He won't do that, of course, for, with scant exception, he has shown himself to be an appalling finisher once he has stung an opponent. Godoy needs to be careless only once, or overconfident only once, to wind up in a hapless heap on the canvas. Pastor was doing very nicely at Detroit this fall when he suffered a burst of optimism and a knockout, almost simultaneously. Paolino Uzcudum baffled Louis with an airtight defense for three rounds, once upon a time, then had the poor taste to peer out from behind his hairy-armed defense and nearly had his skull crushed. Most boxing writers say that that particular punch which Louis landed on the inquisitive woodchopper was the hardest single blow in ring history. I wouldn't know, having missed the Goliath-David and Cribb-Molyneaux matches.

Godoy can't hit hard enough to knock out Louis' sister Eunice, who is a junior at Howard University, and it is extremely doubtful if he will be the first to puncture Louis' amazing face-skin—which has never sprung a single leak, not even the night Schmeling knocked Louis' head squash-shaped. Godoy's most extreme success would be to stay the limit. He could trade on that feat for the remainder of his life, so incredibly far above his competitors is the Brown Bomber.

But Mr. Johnson WAS a Pinch-Hitter

Walter Johnson's political rival for a seat in Congress, Frank R. Long, of Kensington, Md., sounded off on the pitcher-farmer-statesman the other day. "Mr. Johnson has publicly declared that he knows nothing about politics," Long stated, "and that he would rather go 'coon hunting . . . We need pinch-hitters more than we need pitchers in politics, and Mr. Johnson is no longer a pitcher and never was a pinch-hitter," Long cried.

Now just a minute, Mr. L. Our candidate, Mr. Johnson, may wear some man's collar for all we know, and may only be exhibiting his good taste by admitting a preference for the company of racoons, but when you slur his fair name as a pinch-hitter you're throwing rubbery mud that might bounce back and splatter you. Johnson always was a dangerous hitter and times without number he batted for others. One particularly memorable afternoon comes to mind. It was 1923. Johnson had pitched the day before and Donie Bush excused him in the seventh inning of a game, with Washington trailing by five runs.

But in the last half of the ninth Washington stumbled into a rally, drew up to within three runs of tying the game and filled the bases with those potential markers. A clarion call went down to the locker room for Johnson, who was nearly dressed by that time in his street clothes. A couple of Washington players picked an argument with the umpire to delay the game, to give him a chance to put some baseball clothes on, and finally he ambled out on the field, tucking in his shirttails and pulling on his belt.

P. S. He hit a home run into the centerfield bleachers.

Notre Dame Track Team Beats Mich.

East Lansing, Mich., Feb. 5 (AP).—The University of Notre Dame track team marred the opening of Michigan State College's indoor track season in the new Jenison Field House here tonight, turning the Spartans back, 57 2-3 to 37 1-3.

The Irish captured six first places to five for the Spartans and the teams each broke two meet records apiece.

Walt Arrington cracked the meet and varsity records for the Spartans with a high jump of 6 feet 5¼, an eighth of an inch over the varsity record and better than 3 inches over the old meet record set last year by Led Leonas, Notre Dame. Leonas made only 6 feet 2 inches tonight.

Bethesda Gets 12th Victory Over Landon

Bethesda-Chevy Chase High's powerful cagemen continued their winning ways yesterday at Landon School, trouncing the hosts by a 35-19 count for their twelfth victory against only four losses this season.

Star of the encounter was Johnny Shumate, the forward who has paced most of the suburbanites' triumphs so far. He registered 16 points to edge out Landon's Baker for scoring honors by a single point, and generally led an attack that kept Bethesda out front throughout.

Attention Scouts! You Passed Up A Record-Breaker

San Francisco, Feb. 5 (AP).—Did you know? Scouts of the 16 major league baseball clubs passed up a draft-tagged player who last season cracked a Pacific Coast League record of 26 years standing.

The player is Brooks Holder, San Francisco Seals outfielder. He hit 24 triples last season. The old record was 23, established jointly in 1913 by Ivan Howard and Harl Maggert, of the Los Angeles club, and tied by Pete Schneider, of Vernon.

In 173 games Holder hit for an average of .314. He knocked in 87 runs, had 89 bases on balls, stole 14 bases, hit 16 sacrifices, 5 home runs and 34 two-baggers.

Young, useful and fast, Holder could have been had for $7,500. Charley Graham, president of the Seals, was more surprised over the fact Holder wasn't drafted than he would have been if Dominic DiMaggio hadn't been sold.

Only Local College Fights of Week; Maryland Travels

Kentucky's Wildcats and Columbus University's Explorers will be left in sole possession of the local college boxing front Saturday night as Maryland journeys to Chapel Hill to fight North Carolina and Catholic University enjoys a rest for the week-end.

Dean John R. Fitzpatrick turned over to Jim McNamara, Explorer coach, numerous telegrams and messages congratulating Columbus on the stand it made against C. U.'s undefeated team last week which saw them lose by only one point.

"We received splendid treatment at Catholic University an dhave no alibis for the defeat," Dean Fitzpatrick said. "I have every reason to believe we will continue our splendid rivalry next season and for years to follow."

McNamara was confined to his home yesterday with a heavy cold but said he would use the same line-up which faced the Cardinals against Kentucky. Columbus, undefeated last year, has suffered two straight defeats, to Miami and C. U., and will be at a high pitch for the Saturday night date in Turner's Arena with the Southeastern Conference team.

Schumacher Signs

Eagles Need Victory Over Rovers Tonight

Confronted with the task of winning an upset or falling almost hopelessly behind in the Eastern Amateur Hockey League race, the Washington Eagles meet the pacesetting New York Rovers at 8:30 tonight at Riverside Stadium.

One of the largest crowds ever to see hockey here is expected to watch the Eagles try to get back into the running in a match that will feature five of the league's ten top scorers. Shutout, 4-0, in Baltimore Sunday night the punchless Washington club dropped 11 points behind New York and four behind Baltimore. This was the local club's twelfth loss in 16 road games.

To upset the Rovers the Eagles must check the league's two deadliest scorers, Center Al Collings and Wing Murdo McKay, as well as another center, Frank Boucher, Jr., who is presently the most prolific pointgetter in the circuit. Collings already this season has established a new record with 79 points. The old mark of 75 was set last year by Herb Foster.

Boucher, though his playing time is lessened by having to alternate with Collings, has come forward with a rush in recent weeks to rise from nowhere in fourth place among the scorers, tied with Baltimore's Norm Calladine. Michael Pechet and Len Loree round out the quintet of Rovers among the first ten scorers.

The Eagles, only league club to hold a season series edge over the Rovers by virtue of four victories in seven matches, are hoping Hal (Admiral) Dewey, Roy Covert and its other erstwhile crackshots will simultaneously snap out of the slump that has retarded the team.

Flinchum Rides 21st Winner of Meeting in Hialeah Feature

Mar Le Defeated In Nose Finish as Pershall Horse Takes Third Straight Race

By the Associated Press

Hialeach Park, Fla., Feb. 5.—The Titusville Purse, a turf course event of a mile and a sixteenth, was the top event on the card as the Miami Jockey Club's flourishing meeting reached the halfway mark here this afternoon. C. W. Pershall's Royal Blue, victorious in his last two efforts on the dirt course, made in three straight after a nose and nose duel with LeMar Stock Farm's Mar Le. W. E. Boeing's Chief Gamble finished third, three lengths behind.

Royal Blue, the first successful choice of the day, paid $5.10 for $2. and got back in 1:48 4-5.

Both Royal Blue and Mar Le have been sprinting. However, it is generally agreed that sprinters will "stick it out" farther on the grass course. It was a two-horse race almost from the break. Mar Le led Royal Blue by a length or less to the stretch, where Flinchum sat down and got the most out of his mount. Mar Le, holding on well, was not menaced for the place by the slow-starting Chief Gamble. Lackawanna and Counterpoise faltered after being well placed, while Seed, the only other starter, performed as if outclassed.

Polly Hyro Wins

A dozen 2-year-old platers were on display in the 3-furlong initial event. T. P. Morgan's Poly Hyro, a first-time starter, emerged the winner in a five-way blanket finish. The filly swerved badly after a good getaway, but was soon righted and just got up to nose out the pace-making Belle Town. Dou Douia barely beat out Bettie Nux and Red Burr. The winner, a $24.30 for $2 shot, finished in 0.34 3-5.

Satiation, the favorite in the 7-furlong second race, once again failed to carry his speed far enough and was beaten out in the closing strides by the $22.70 for $2 Bay Hour. A neck separated the pair, while Rose-Ouzel was beaten three lengths for the place. Showing marked improvement over his recent dismal effort, Gay Hour kept within range of the pacemaking Satiation and Mellowmoon, collared the latter with little trouble, but had to be hard ridden to wear down the choice.

Lady Flash Scores

Lady Flash came like a flash through the stretch to prevail by two lengths in the 7 furlongs of the third race. Anti Air nosed out Ambuscade for second money, while the well back Cerise III was a sluggish fifth. Zelkova and Naadja took a long lead over the others, only to collapse in the stretch when slower beginners caught up. Charlie Durando shot Lady Flash to the front in the final furlong and his mount pulled clear, to return $11.

Inscolad, under little Freddie Smith, came along in time to drive home a half-length winner of the fourth race, another test of 7 furlongs. Halcyon Boy saved the place by a length and a half, with Thats Me third.

POLLY HYGRO, away slowly, moved up fast between the leaders after going the opening quarter mile and got up the last strides. BELLE TOWN, a forward contender throughout, finished gamely to outlast DOU DOUIA. The latter displayed the most speed, but hung in the final drive. BETTIE NUX bore out at the start and swerved in the last furlong, but finished fastest of all.

LADY FLASH, going in her best form, worked her way up gradually and, assuming the lead when straightened out into the stretch, held away to the end. ANTI AIR stumbled after the start. She bettered her position steadily in the final quarter mile and outstayed AMBUSCADE in the final drive. AMBUSCADE saved much ground entering the stretch and closed stoutly. LADY INFINITE was hard ridden, but could not keep pace with the leaders. CERISSE III suffered repeated interference and was blocked through the stretch.

INSCOLAD, going forwardly under light restraint in the early stages, moved up with determination on the outside entering the stretch, continued gamely when the real test came to outlast HALCYON BOY. The latter displayed keen speed, raced DARBY DALLAS into defeat the first 5 furlongs, assumed command, but was unable to withstand the winner's challenge. THATS ME, strongly ridden throughout, finished stoutly, but could not better his position through the stretch. GOOOSEBERRY had no excuses in the running. BEAUZAR closed a big gap to deadheat for fourth place.

ROYAL BLUE, on the outside and going in close attendance of the leader all the way, finished gamely to extreme pressure and outstayed MAR LE. The latter saved much ground in the early stages, held on tenaciously when challenged, but could not stave off the winner's bid. CHIEF GAMBLE improved his position gradually on the outside in the final half mile and disposed of LACKAWANNA in the stretch run. The latter saved ground but could not get up.

SIXTH RACE—One and three-sixteenths miles. Purse, $1,000; claiming. For 4-year-olds and upward. Start good from Puett gate. Won driving; place same. Went to post at 4:30. Off at 4:30½. WEARY FLOWER, on the inside and in tight quarters until straightened out into the stretch, obtained clear passage and took command with a rush. She continued courageously when the final test came to outlast WISE WILL. The latter, well up on the outside, made a bold effort when called upon, but could not overhaul the winner. CONRAD MANN circled the field rounding the turn and lost much ground. He closed gamely through the stretch and shook off the others. SHOW UP weakened after displaying early foot.

SEVENTH RACE—One and one-eighth miles. Purse, $1,000; claiming. For 4-year-old and upward. Start good from Puett gate. Won driving; place same. Went to post at 5:01½. Off at 5:01½. Winner, Mrs. L. Two-dollar mutuels paid—BOW AND ARROW, $29.50, $8.40, $4.80; WINGED VICTORY, $4.00, $3.00; OUR BUD, $4.60.

BOW AND ARROW, prominent contender, moved up on the outside of the leader midway around the lower turn, continued courageously under a hard drive in the final quarter to get up in the last strides. WINGED VICTORY, rated in front, had something in reserve when challenged, but faltered in the last stride. OUR BUD improved his position steadily, but then faltered in the stretch run and just lasted to stave off DIABROOM'S bid. The latter was under vigorous pressure the entire trip.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—MISS B. B., $8.40, $3.70, $3.30; BURNING STICK, $3.70, $3.10; PARI-ERNEST, $6.20.

MISS B. B., rushed to the front rounding the first turn, was then steadied in front after entering the backstretch. She shook off PARI-ERNEST and PAUL PRY entering the stretch and held BURNING STICK safe in the final drive. BURNING STICK lacked speed, but closed a big gap the last 3 furlongs. PARI-ERNEST, a forward factor all the way, faltered through the stretch. HIGH ARCH closed stoutly.

Selections at Hialeah Park

Dear Al,

My candidate for the best informed man on the breeding of thoroughbred horses is Humphrey Finney, who does a swell job of editing the Maryland Horse, the Free State's racing magazine. When a racing writer wants to know the sire of a horse he doesn't look in the records if Finney is around. And Finney not only will tell you the sire and the dam, but he will go back, if need be, and give you the origin of the blood lines. I have checked back on him many times and he always proves right as rain. When a racing writer wants to know the whereabouts of a certain horse, particularly a Maryland horse, a phone call to Finney gives him the answer. "Why that mare is now on Mrs. Heighe's farm," says Finney. "She has had two foals, one by Theatrical. She's a good mother, too." Of course, Finney uses this material in his writing. I have done a bit of typewriter plugging, myself, in my day, but I just can't seem to get the knack of remembering horse ancestors. Secretary of the Maryland Racing Writers, Finney always has his knowledge of horses at the disposal of members. In addition, I have never heard him kick when one of the boys "lifts" information from his magazine for their papers without giving him credit. He will be surprised as the next one to see this piece. However, he has a good new issue of the Maryland Horse on the stands. It is thorough as to the coming breeding season and will be of interest not only to horse owners and trainers but to the average race fan. It is the official organ of the Maryland Horse Breeders' Association. Finney is always on the go and how he has time to write as much as he does and edit the magazine to boot, always has been a mystery to me. I have known him a long time and have yet to see him make a bet. Confucius say: Gold Band may be sweet music. BILL.

First race—Painted Veil may be the right one in the day's opener. She has the speed and I'm going to string along. Fantasama has shown good energy on occasion and will do a lot of running in the company. Miss Thirteen is not far from a winning effort.

Second race—Roy T. gets my call in this field. He has worked well in between races and I see no reason for mistakes. Arga and Noble Boy may fill out the money bracket.

Third race—Como No turned back cheaper ones with a good exhibition over this track and I'm going to be there for this mutuel. Ugin should perform in good style. Little Rhody has defeated better and perhaps I have underestimated his ability.

Fourth race—I'm going to try to make Roar pick up another purse. Bounced home at long odds for us once and is fit as hands make horses. Go Home is a fair sort and should be in the money. Time Please for the minor award.

Fifth race—Betty's Bobby gets the edge over this group of 3-year-olds. Her trials say she is ready. Town Boy has been showing speed and is dangerous. Tipcat could awake and take it all.

Sixth race—Feng likes this route and appears nicely placed. All this one needs is the right ride. Presidential and Sun Phantom to take care of the place and show awards.

Seventh race—Red Chief should go well in this test of a mile and an eighth. He deserves the call over Sure Swift and Alpin Glow. The last-named has been sent me as a tip but I prefer them in the order named.

Eighth race—Ballwick gets another chance in the day's finale. He will have Ready About and Erin's Sun to beat for the top money.

to my normal playing weight of 188 during spring training."

Larry MacPhail, executive vice president of the club, revealed that one of the reasons the Dodgers outbid all other clubs was because Fred Haney, manager of the St. Louis Browns, had offered Cullenbine $22,500 to sign, and would have gone higher if that club had a fatter bankroll.

"Haney is a smart baseball man," MacPhail said, "and he managed Cullenbine two years at Toledo. If he thinks the boy is that good, it's good enough for me."

MacPhail said that contrary to popular belief the Dodgers were not interested in McCoy, but that when the Landis decision was revealed "I had Manager Leo Durocher hop down to Florida and keep Cullenbine under his wing."

Cullenbine is wacky about golf so Durocher played with him for a week and finally convinced him to join the Dodgers.

He is the second of the freed Tigers who'll receive a trial with the Dodgers. The other is Steve Rachunok, a young right-handed pitcher.

Bernie Cady In Top Bout Tomorrow

Bernie Cady, lanky southpaw fighter from an athletic Georgetown family, will have to solve the circulatory tactics of Colmar-Manor A. C.'s Charles Schneider tomorrow night at Turner's Arena if he expects to reach the finals of the Golden Gloves boxing tournament next week.

Bernie, 126-pound brother of St. John's basketball and football star, has stepped in as something of a "dark horse" to win the Dr. J. A. Bonnette Trophy that goes to the outstanding novice fighter.

Ray Landis, Phil Furr's lightweight protege, who meets Lew Burgess, of Pete's A. C., in the other 135-pound bout on tomorrow's semifinal show is the present favorite.

Should Cady get by Schneider, he probably will enter the finals with a brighter record than Landis Schneider, a dangerous hitter when he moves in and swings, put up an irksome battle last week by constantly back-pedaling and dancing around and around his opponent.

Fifteen matches, headlined by a 147-pound senior fight between Billy Kekeris and Nick Mancini, are included on the card.

Grain Prices Point Higher In Active Pit

Bad Weather Here and Abroad Plus Export Business Help Prices

By the Associated Press

Chicago, Feb. 5.—Wheat and corn prices rose a cent a bushel and more in a moderately active trade today, important strength to the entire grain market.

Pessimistic reports regarding Northern Hemisphere winter crops, with European advices stressing cold weather damage, inspired purchasing of wheat. Export business and the country holding policy strengthened corn. Processors participated in both markets, although demand from this direction was limited mostly to hand-to-mouth purchasing.

Reversing an early downward trend, wheat erased opening fractional losses and advanced as much as 1⅝ cents from the day's lows. Part of the gain was lost just before the close but final prices were ⅜ to ¾ higher than Saturday, with May at 97⅜@97¼ and July 94⅝@94¾. Corn closed ⅞ to 1⅛ higher, May 56@55⅞, July 55¾; oats ⅜ up; rye ⅛ to ¼ up and lard ⅜ higher.

War Demand Booms Orders for Machine Tools

New York, Feb. 5 (AP).—Alex Dow, president of the Detroit Edison Co., told company shareholders today that war orders are booming the automotive city's machine tool business.

The bearded chief of the utility concern, who watched Detroit rise as the automobile capital of the world, reported machine tools were a relatively new but fast-growing industry in that area.

Organized primarily to serve motor manufacturers, the Michigan tool plants now were getting business from far afield. He cited $1,000,000 foreign order alone received by Detroit tool makers.

"Machine tool business is prospering," Dow commented. "At this stage it looks as if 1940 will be another fairly good year for business generally."

Dow, one of the oldest operating officials in the electric power industry, presided at the annual meeting. He has been with Detroit Edison and predecessor companies for more than 40 years.

Columbia Federal Honors Harrell On Birthday

John B. Harrell, president of Columbia Federal Savings and Loan Association, was guest of honor at a dinner tendered by his associates last night celebrating his seventy-fifth birthday. The affair was held at the Wardman Park Hotel with the following present:

Mr. and Mrs. Clarence E. Kefauver, Mr. and Mrs. Albert O. Denham, Mr. and Mrs. C. Gay Harrell, Mr. and Mrs. George B. Cowles, Mr. and Mrs. W. Owen Hohenstein, Mr. and Mrs. Howard E. Thompson, Mr. and Mrs. R. T. Harrell, Mr. and Mrs. William Poulten.

A native of Suffolk, Va., Mr. Harrell moved to Washington in 1896. Engaging in the real estate business, he assisted in the development of the great Northwest section of the city. In 1907 he organized the Columbia Federal which today has resources in excess of $5,200,000. Last month Mr. Harrell was reelected president of the association for the thirty-fourth successive time.

Cotton Futures 15 to 55 Cents Per Bale Higher

New York, Feb. 5 (AP).—Cotton futures advanced early today and stayed at the higher levels throughout the session. Final prices were 8 to 11 points up. There seemed to be little determined effort to force the price list one way or the other. When early buying orders from mill and professional interests were satisfied, trade came to a virtual standstill. Offerings were limited to hedging, scattered Bombay and New Orleans liquidation.

Of prime importance to the market now, one broker explained, is Washington action on appropriations for farm parity payments for 1941 crops. At the same time, suspension of export subsidy payments on raw cotton has cut down prospects of further heavy sales abroad, in the view of several analysts.

Foreign Trade Opportunities

The European war has increased by 67.1 per cent the foreign trade opportunities passed on to business men by the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce.

James W. Young, director, reported yesterday that in the last four months of 1939 foreigners sent him 122,472 inquiries about purchase of American goods which were relayed to American businessmen. In the similar period of 1938, the number of such inquiries was 73,296.

"The impact of the war," Young said, "left many exporters bewildered and confused. Rapidly shifting foreign exchange regulations, import license requirements, embargoes placed by certain countries on shipments to others, passage of the Neutrality Act, the opening of new markets for goods in some cases and the closing of the others, all added to this bewilderment and confusion.

"The Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce," Young said, "has dispelled a large part of this confusion."

Severe Cold Hurts European Grain Crops

Unofficial sources abroad have reported extensive winter damage to European grain, the office of foreign agricultural relations said yesterday. Low temperatures with inadequate snow were said to have resulted in abnormal winter killing from the Black Sea to Belgium, presumably including the Danube Basin, Germany and Italy. Winter crops in Spain, Portugal, the United Kingdom and France also were said to have suffered.

"Since about 95 per cent of the wheat acreage in European countries, exclusive of Russia, is sown to winter wheat," the announcement said, "any abnormal winter killing is likely to have unfavorable repercussions on the bread supplies of the countries affected. In the past increased spring seeding has rarely compensated for heavy winter losses."

Trading Volume Lowest Since July 10, But Wall Street Seers Predict Upturn; Day's Price Changes Are Fractional

New York, Feb. 5.—A few of the soothsayers who sit around and gaze at the crystal glass covers on stock tickers have come to the conclusion that the market is on the verge of something very big. They aren't too certain of the direction which the big push is to take or who will fire the starting gun but they think things are going to be better, and very soon.

Probably they are basing their deductions on the general assumption that the law of averages is in favor of better times for the financial district. The "for rent" sign is going to go out in a lot more windows below Fulton street if the brokerage fraternity can't stir up some business. Transactions on the big board today amounted to 413,045 shares, the smallest for any day since last July 10.

Outlook Uncertain

The disappointing thing about the whole situation is that no one, other than the soothsayers, can see anything in the immediate future that will change the situation. The prospect is for continued dullness, and while that may have the blessing of regulatory authorities, it is no help if you are considering a new venture which will require the raising of risk capital. Under such circumstances you would want an active speculative market. You don't have it now and while the evils of the twenties may thus have been eliminated, there is at the same time a limited opportunity to raise new money and put unemployed men to work.

The change in prices on the big board today was in keeping with the stagnant trading. The composite average showed a net loss of 0.16 point. Store shares and lower grade rails developed a show of resistance to the lower trend and the oils, utilities and motors didn't do too poorly. Naturally the vast majority of price changes were fractional, and they lacked significance.

Steel Operations Lower

Business and political news was not of a nature to bring any noteworthy change in market sentiment. The item of greatest moment in business was the weekly compilation of steel operations. This placed the rate for this week at 71.7 per cent of capacity, a drop of 5.6 points, or 7.2 per cent, from the previous week. The fact that the present rapid decline in operations is in violent contrast to the seasonal performance of this week in previous years has proved disturbing to the optimists. The difference of the present situation lies in the fact that steel operations in the last quarter were boosted out of proportion by the expectation of large war orders and, now that these orders have been slow to put in their appearance, there has been a contrary setback.

Steel stocks averaged slightly lower for the day as did most of the other important groups. The exception to the trend was the local tractions, which also showed independence on Saturday. New highs for the 1939-40 market were shown by two of the three Brooklyn and Queens issues and by the three Brooklyn-Manhattan Transit issues. There was also a lively demand for traction bonds. The assumption that the unification plan will go ahead to completion has led to the buying of these issues.

Loft Most Active

Aside from the tractions there were a few miscellaneous industrial issues which reflected special developments but action in these had no significance as far as the general financial situation is concerned. There was good buying in Wrigley, for instance, which carried this issue up 2¼ points to a new high. Eastman Kodak, off 3, was at a new low for this year and Peoples Drug was off 2½ on a few transactions. Most active stock of the day was Loft, off a major fraction. Motor and aviation shares claimed a good portion of the tape and the general tendency of leaders in both groups was to turn in small fractional losses.

Listed bonds were dull today, with foreign dollar issues in better demand than the domestic variety. Brazilian bonds gathered strength from a Rio de Janeiro report that resumption of debt service is under consideration. New York City traction bonds remained active in the corporate department, but the tone was irregular. Investment issues of leading classifications held around former levels. The turnover was only $4,550,000.

Brazilian Bonds Up

Although financial observers here expect further delay in any Brazilian debt payments, these issues moved up by fractions to a full point. Other Latin-American default bonds tended to advance sympathetically. Finland 6s gained 1½ points, and improvement developed in Scandinavian and Belgian bonds. German issues were neglected, while some inquiry appeared for Canadian and Australian loans. Japanese obligations showed good results.

United States Treasury obligations were neglected, and changes were mostly toward slightly lower levels. Best ratings of corporate bonds held to previous figures.

Steel Operations Drop for 4th Week

New York, Feb. 5. (AP).—Steel mills operations will drop 5.6 points this week to 71.7 per cent of the industry's capacity, the American Iron & Steel Institute estimated today. The downward revision was the fourth in a row. Last week production was at 77.3 per cent of capacity. A month ago it was 86.1 per cent, a year ago 53.4 per cent. Steel men said new orders were still running far behind shipments. Many saw little chance for a pick-up in demand until automobile makers come into the market, possibly later this month or in March.

United Air Travel 57% Above Year Ago

Chicago, Feb. 5.—United Air Lines flew an estimated total of 9,651,000 revenue passenger miles in January to start the new year with a gain of 57 per cent over the 6,126,671 revenue passenger miles flown in January, 1939, it was announced by Harold Crary, vice president of traffic.

The large increase was accompanied by the scheduling of a fourth daily nonstop flight between Chicago and New York and 60,000 miles of new flying monthly, the first time in the history of the company that new schedules have been added in January, Crary said.

Butter Drops, Eggs Rise in Chicago

Chicago, Feb. 5 (AP).—Old crop butter futures broke 60 to 70 points today as dealers in the wholesale market cut prices a cent in an effort to move surpluses. Futures on the Mercantile Exchange closed at two-week lows, February contracts 29.80 and March 29.10 cents.

Wholesale egg prices, however, advanced 1 to 1¼ cents a dozen to figures as much as 7¼ cents above a year ago as trade and consumer demand continued strong. Fresh graded extra firsts sold locally at 23¼ cents, up 1¼ cents. Contract egg prices, reflecting wholesale market strength, advanced slightly.

Copper Reported On Way to Reich Via Vladivostok

Manzanillo, Mexico, Feb. 5 (AP).—Authoritative sources described today the transshipment of 5,000 tons of copper from United States freighters to a Soviet Russian ship which started for Vladivostok Saturday. The freighter Mayakovsky, it was asserted, met the American ships in this port last week to effect the transfer. Along the waterfront it was rumored, without confirmation, however, that the copper was destined for Germany by way of the Trans-Siberian Railroad.

New York, Feb. 5.—Trade circles here today said copper exports to Soviet Russia from the United States in December totaled 17,057 tons, an unusually heavy allotment. Of the total, 5,152 tons were shipped from the Tacoma-Seattle district, while 11,905 moved out of New York.

Tacoma, Wash., Feb. 5 (AP).—The Tacoma smelter, from which an American freighter cleared for Vladivostok, Russia, with 5,000 tons of copper last Wednesday, has made no shipments to Manzanillo, Mexico, for the past two months, E. A. Dimmen, shipping clerk, said today.

"We keep a close check on where our copper goes, and none has gone to Manzanillo for transshipment," Dimmen said when informed 5,000 tons of copper, reportedly destined for Germany via Russia, had left the Mexican port last Saturday. A check of the shipping register showed ten vessels have loaded copper at the smelter since last January 10.

Steel Profits For 1939 Far Above 1938

But Net for Last Year Was Substantially Below 1937 Total

Cleveland, Feb. 5.—First eight steel producers to issue earnings statements for 1939 report $138,107,042 aggregate net income, a manifold increase over total net earnings of $2,377,640 reported for the same companies in recession year 1938, according to the magazine Steel today. With combined ingot capacity of 50,527,000 gross tons, the eight producers represent 70.9 per cent of the industry.

Net fourth 1939 quarter profit for these companies was $61,470,484, an increase of 133.9 per cent over $26,2 .500 in the third period and much greater than the fourth 1938 quarter net profit of $14,190,513.

Fourth quarter net earnings for these companies was highest for any quarter since 1929. Total 1939 net income, however, was only 62.7 per cent of the $172,387,796 net profit earned by them in 1937.

Ingot operations for the entire industry in 1939 averaged 64.29 per cent of capacity, compared to 39.65 per cent in 1938, the magazine continues. Fourth 1939 quarter operations were 89.3 per cent of capacity, against 55.5 per cent in corresponding 1938 period and 62.2 per cent in quarter ended September 30.

Griff Assails Landis' Farm Reform Plans

Fight to Last Breath Promised by Nats Owner In Defense of System

One of the good things, he said, is a fund of $18,000 borne equally by the American, National and National Association of Minor Leagues, finances a committee to organize new leagues.

"Not so long ago there were 11 leagues. Now there are 44, thanks to this committee. We are still spreading the gospel of baseball—and they say we do no good," Griffith flared.

The Washington boss believes that the ultimate solution may be a limitation on working agreements between major league clubs and all leagues from class B on down.

"From class B on up the leagues can pretty well take care of themselves. Let them pass a 'no option' rule above class B. Throw the draft open, it's all right with me. I'm willing to take my chances on the open market with any club. But they've got to leave class C and D alone or else kill baseball," he warned.

As for the recent edict against Walter Briggs of Detroit, Griffith has only one quarrel with Landis.

"That $47,500 retroactive fine for the benefit of players out of the Detroit chain for several years was unprecedented.

"Briggs, thrust into baseball overnight by Navin's death, is an automobile—not a baseball man. Those things that happened occurred before he came into baseball and since they happened under Landis' regime, he had a right to suppose that everything was in order. Landis was a little rough with that fine."

Thereupon Griffith subsided with a parting thrust at "cold storage ball players."

"Out of the 6,000 or so players in the minors, only two can be classified as 'cold storage players.' They are Rizzuto and Priddy of Kansas City. The other 5,998 are being helped. Is it right to rob many of benefits because of two?"

Record Number Of Entries for C.U. Track Meet

With the Catholic University boxers resting because of an open date this Saturday, the news from Brookland concerns the record number of entries pouring in for the Cardinals' seventh annual track and field meet, March 2, the proceeds of which will be donated to the Finnish relief fund.

Dorsey Griffith, director of the meet, announced last night that Navy will send the largest squad ever to participate in the games. A total of 21 middies have been entered, including Lorne Chabot and Eric Hopley.

Chabot is the sprint star of the team and pushed Johnny Maher in the feature Abbey Club 50 last year. Hopley, crack plebe sprinter last year, has been making near-record time in the 440 and should be one of the star quarter-milers in the East this year.

Maher, Villanova's star, wrote Griffith he will defend his 50-yard sprint crown. Another defending champion is Maryland's great Jimmy Kehoe, winner of the Rector's 1,000 last year. Griffith intends to make this a real race this year. He has extended an invitation to Campbell Kane, of Indiana, Big Ten 880 champion.

Haight Catches Andy Farkas And Becomes a Better Man

Redskin Star's the Kind of Fellow You'd Want Kid Brother to Be, Race Writer Opines

pose him became acute. Espey, with press agent ingenuity, suggested a shot with the drugstore Indian. The photographer liked the idea of snapping Andy pushing furniture. I was for getting my own picture taken with Andy at a desk. Andy pulled the adding machine around in front of him and poised a finger. "How's this?" he asked.

We decided to try the picture with the wooden Indian, mascot of the Redskins. So we gathered in the front of the office just inside the big show window on Ninth street. As we debated the position that Andy should take, I looked at the window. Pressing against the glass was the distorted face of a boy.

It was decided that Espey would stand on one side of the wooden Indian and Andy on the other. Andy was to be telling the history of the ancient works of art to Espey. While the photographer was making his final adjustments, I looked at the plate glass again to see if the boy was still there. Instead of one flat face and one pair of bulging eyes, there were now four noses pressed against the glass, and behind this first line there were enough youngsters to start a football game.

Andy Was the Magnet

The camera clicked. Andy and Espey relaxed. The street door opened. A boy entered, fairly pushed in by a loud "Yea, Farkas!" from the other youngsters. The boy, with his eyes almost popping out of his head, walked up to Farkas and asked, "How about your autograph, Andy?"

"Bet your life," said Andy with a smile, taking from him a sheet of paper crowded with figures and with a big blue "B" on it. Andy began to write.

"Hold it," yelled the photographer. The camera clicked.

I had suspected Espey sent those boys around to the window. The photographer thought I did it. After I talked to Andy I knew he was the magnet.

In fact, I'm not a kid. But I was drawn to Andy. I had come to talk to him for a few minutes, get a story and rush to The Post to find out which horse had won the third at Hialeah. When I left him the eighth race at Hialeah was history. I probably would have been there until the entries came out for Bowie next April if I didn't have to make a living.

Farkas Takes No Credit

I don't want to convey the impression that Andy Farkas gave me a sermon or that he piled the "old stuff" high, but, somehow, I came away from that fellow a better man. Those are sissy words, perhaps, coming from a guy who has shot craps at Jimmy's, bent more elbows than the Finnish riflemen and coasted-to-coasted it with the roughest sport element. But it's true.

When a professional football player, whom I had once pictured as a rough, tough, hell-bent, if not swell-headed young man, makes me raise my finger to my face to halt the flow of a tear, he has something. I won't point to the spot in this piece. Just read on, perhaps you'll recognize it.

To hear Andy tell it, he hasn't had one thing to do with his success. His mother, his father, his wife, his coaches, his friends (particularly Gene Buck) are responsible "for anything I have accomplished."

Farkas is the son of Dr. Geza Farkas, who was educated in Budapest and came to this country as a young man. Andy starred on the football team in his home town, Toledo, Ohio. From there he went to Detroit University where he was outstanding on the eleven.

Father Is Stricken

His brand of football attracted the pro scouts and he signed with the Redskins. How did he learn to play the game? The fundamentals and the knack of playing "for keeps" came from Bob Tiernan, his high school coach. Pass defense, ability to adapt himself to emergencies, sportsmanship, from Gus Dorais, his college coach. Polish, the "ins" and "outs" of pro football and confidence from Ray Flaherty, coach of the Redskins.

Dr. Farkas gradually developed into a football fan as Andy's career gathered momentum. With the Redskins scheduled to play at Detroit in 1938, Dr. Farkas had been eagerly awaiting the day. But he was taken ill two weeks before the game. In fact, Andy's father was so sick that he was allowed to listen to his broadcast only while his physician was with him.

The Redskins were playing the Lions, who already led by 3 to 0 on a place-kick. A little later Detroit made a safety. "As the result of a 'boner' by Farkas, the Lions sent their lead to 5-0," came the words of the announcer.

The physician looked at Dr. Farkas. Andy's father had fainted.

Radio Was Forgotten

While they worked over the unconscious father of Andy, no one had turned off the radio. Finally Dr. Farkas began to mumble, then he smiled. The physician eyed Dr. Farkas, probably suspecting he was not rational.

"How do you feel?" asked the physician.

"I'm all right now. Didn't you hear that man say that Andy just went over for a touchdown?" replied Dr. Farkas.

For the remainder of the game, which ended 7 to 5 in favor of the Redskins, Dr. Farkas listened intently with a wide grin on his face. The physician told Andy the story when he visited his father after the game.

"He was so jolly that night that, for a while, I wondered why he had not been allowed to see the game," said Andy.

There's a beautiful understanding between Andy Farkas and his father. Now that's a sissy thing for a racewriter to say, but it is the best way I have of describing it. While I talked to Andy about yardage gained, long forward passes, why he was bewildered in his first season with the Redskins and how he staged an about face to be a national star last year, his conversation always came back to his father.

"Miss Touchdown Enters"

I am certainly glad it did. Otherwise, perhaps, I never would have heard about his Scotty dog, "Miss Touchdown."

Among Andy's treasured possessions at his Toledo home was his dog. She followed him almost everywhere. When Andy jumped the fence instead of going around to the gate, Miss Touchdown crawled under the fence. She was upstairs and downstairs, always on Andy's trail.

The Scotty had been a gift from the county sheriff, who raised the breed. When the sheriff saw Touchy, as they called her, with Dr. Farkas he knew Andy was not at home.

When Andy left to join the Redskins, Touchy, of course, had to stay home. Andy gave his father special instructions as to the care of the dog. There was a lot of rollicking, hugging and roughing with Touchy before Andy drove away.

But before I go further with the story of Andy, his father and the Scotty, let me explain why "beautiful" may be the right word for the alliance between the football player and Dr. Farkas.

Always a Post Card

Every day for more than two years a penny postal card has been mailed to Andy from Toledo. These postal cards have followed him from coast to coast and around the circuit with the team. On each, the signature is "Miss Touchdown." The message, written in Hungarian, is one about the previous day's experiences of the dog.

"Yesterday I fell down the cellar steps. My other master scolded me as he brushed me afterward. But I like him and he will take care of me until you return." That is not a true sample, but it conveys the idea.

And so Andy went off to the football wars, leaving Touchy home.

The postal cards came regularly. But they did not tell Andy that the little Scotty was off her feed. They did not tell him that Miss Touchdown was spending most of her days just lying on the front porch watching the road leading to the house. They did not tell him that there came a day when Touchy, his dog, was very sick. They did not tell him that Touchy died—died pining for him.

The thought of telling Andy that the dog had died was too much for Dr. Farkas. A week passed. Andy's letters home always inquired about Touchy. They made Dr. Farkas' heart heavy.

Sub for "Touchy"

One day Dr. Farkas went to the sheriff's office. He had decided to try to get another dog exactly like Touchy. The sheriff and Dr. Farkas looked over the Scotties, and none was a duplicate of the other dog. After a long search, Dr. Farkas finally found a new "Miss Touchdown."

His plan was to keep the passing of the first dog from Andy. Dr. Farkas got in touch with as many of Andy's friends as he could and spread the word that no one was to tell Andy.

But "running a ringer in" (turf vernacular) on Andy did not end with acquiring a dog of the same likeness. They were Touchy's old tricks, mannerisms and her love for Andy to be considered.

Dr. Farkas and the others of the family went to work on "Miss Touchdown No. 2." In order to acquaint the dog with Andy, his father allowed her to play with one of the boy's shoes. He locked her in Andy's room. He gave her Andy's old bathing suit to chew up. Of course, he accustomed the dog to the name of Touchy.

In addition, Dr. Farkas and others of the family continually talked of Andy around the dog. Several times a day, Dr. Farkas would go to the front door, look around and call, "Andy, Andy."

When Andy came home for a brief visit he brought three other Redskin players with him.

Every Trick Perfect

"We four walked up to the gate. Father had been watching for us. He opened the door and Touchy came out. She ran right up to me. Her tail was wagging so hard I thought it would come off. She licked my shoes. I took her up and she tried to run all over my head and shoulders," said Andy yesterday.

"I had no reason to suspect anything. During my stay I put her through her tricks. She did them in the usual way. In fact, I just took her for granted."

And so Andy Farkas went back to football. The season ended. He returned home. Touchy was there to greet him.

About a month later, the sheriff came to visit with Dr. Farkas and Andy happened by the living room door. He heard the sheriff ask, "How does Andy like Miss Touchdown No. 2?"

The question started Andy thinking.

That evening Andy was shaving and his father was sitting in the next room.

Beautiful Was the Word

"Father," asked Andy, turning around, "is this the same dog I've always had."

Unknown to Dr. Farkas, Andy could see his father through the open door in the corner of the mirror.

Andy looked in the corner of the mirror. His father put his hands over his face to smother a sly giggle.

With that Andy wheeled around and exclaimed, "Why you good, old lying rascal!"

Yesterday, I asked Andy, "Now that you and your wife will make your home in Washington, I guess you will bring Miss Touchdown here, will you not?"

"I wouldn't think of it, Walter. Why, that man worships that dog. Then, besides, I get those postal cards," replied Andy.

Now I ask you, was "beautiful" the right word?

100 Are Made Idle by Order To Bata Firm

Shoe Company Work May Be Curtailed By Half Tomorrow

A Labor Department order barring 53 Czech "instructors" from employment at the Bata Shoe Co. factory at Belkamp, Md., may result in curtailing operations one-half by tomorrow, company spokesman announced yesterday.

The Bata concern's Washington counsel, Walter G. Moyle, yesterday confirmed reports that a curtailment of factory operations yesterday sent about 100 employes from their machines. He said that the work had been slowed down following the enforced dismissal of the Czech supervisors in accordance with the order of Commissioner of Immigration Houghteling.

After an investigation Houghteling declared that American workmen could perform the teaching function of the Czech instructors and revoked the waiver of the contract labor law that permitted the immigration of the Bata concern's Czecho-Slovakian employes.

Moyle said he advised the Bata company's managers to keep the plant open and "make every effort to go on" but was told that by today or tomorrow it would probably be necessary to dismiss another 300 workers. He said the plant normally employs about 850.

Moyle insisted that the company had no intention of ignoring Houghteling's order, but felt that the commissioner had revoked a promise made last summer on the basis of which the plant was put into operation.

He said that he filed a formal appeal yesterday, asking for a hearing. He said he would seek a reversal of Houghteling's ruling. The order provides that the Czechs sever their connections with the Bata company or face immediate deportation.

Moyle said that a serious problem was created by the unemployment of the 53 instructors in question. He said he has been unable to arrange for their emigration to either Canada or South America, where the Bata company has other plants, and he feared to arrange for their return to their homes in former Czecho-Slovakia lest they be taken from the boat by the British and interned. In the eyes of the British, Moyle said, the workmen are German nationals.

Coast Guard To Aid Weather Forecast Data

Bureau Is Handicapped By War in That Fewer Ships Report Conditions

The Coast Guard cutter Duane sailed from Norfolk, Va., yesterday to take up a mid-Atlantic position as a permanent floating weather station for the Weather Bureau. The cutter Bibb will sail from Norfolk shortly to take up another position as a weather station, Coast Guard officials announced.

Authorized by President Roosevelt, the plan is to aid the Weather Bureau. Due to war conditions and reduced shipping the bureau has been seriously handicapped by insufficient weather reports to work out forecasts for ocean commerce. Cooperating with scientists of the bureau and the department of Agriculture, the Coast Guard will have six vessels servicing the two permanent stations.

The Duane and Bibb will be stationed approximately a third and two-thirds of the distance between Bermuda and the Azores, it was announced. Other cutters which will relieve the ships are the Campbell, Hamilton, Ingham and Spencer.

Two official observers are assigned to each of the ships. The Duane is in charge of Commander John H. Cornell. The Bibb is commanded by Commander Henry Coyle.

Weather Bureau officials reported that since the beginning of the war it has been difficult to obtain sufficient information from neutral and belligerent ships to prepare maps. Transatlantic airplane service has suffered particularly as a result.

From the cutters, colored balloons for directional and speed observations of the wind will be sent up. The radiosonde, a miniature radio broadcasting station weighing less than two pounds, attached to a heavier balloon, will be used to send back readings of pressure, humidity and temperature at heights possibly reaching to 100,000 feet.

Contract Bridge

By Florence Osborn.

Dr. Paul Stern, the inventor of the Australian system (now a refugee in London), has drawn up a special set of eccentric and amusing hands.

Today's Hand

NORTH DEALER

	♠ A 10 2 ♡ A 8 6 4 ◇ 6 5 4 2 ♣ K 2

The bidding:

North	East	South	West
1 ♡	Pass	2 ♠	Pass
3 ♠	Pass	4 NT.	Pass
5 NT.	Pass	7 ♠	Pass
Pass	Pass

Opening lead: Q ♣

The problem is to make a grand slam at spades.

Here is the solution:

"It was hopeless to touch the trump suit, but there was a glimmer of hope if both opponents held four hearts and three diamonds. He could then make the contract if the trumps were divided three-two and the queen and knave were not in one hand.

"The first trick is taken by the ace of clubs. The king of hearts is overtaken by dummy's ace and a small heart trumped. Dummy is re-entered with the king of clubs and another heart trumped. Another club is led and ruffed in dummy. Three diamond tricks are now made and the position is:

	♠ A 10 ♡ None ◇ 6 ♣ None
♠ Q 8 6 ♡ None ◇ None ♣ None	WEST / EAST	♠ J 7 ♡ None ◇ None ♣ 8
	SOUTH ♠ K ♡ None ◇ None ♣ 10

"At trick 11 the ten of clubs is led. If West plays a small trump dummy's ten wins; if he plays the queen, the ace takes the trick and East's knave of trumps is caught by a simple finesse."

Every once in a while the infant industry of radio, which is nothing if not big business despite its youth, gets a chance to do a good deed for the folks who support it in such noble style. WJSV has just unleashed a new series which will give Washington's flourishing amateur dramatic groups an opportunity to strut their stuff in competition.

Saturday the Interior Department's Theater Group led off with "Bells Beneath the Sea," by Arch Obler. Before the competition is concluded 15 more amateur groups will be heard, all at the same time—4 o'clock Saturdays.

WJSV has a right gaudy cup handy which it will present to the group judged best by an impartial committee composed of the four dramatic critics of the local newspapers. The agreeing to judge this contest is certainly a pretty solid bit of evidence that Miss Frink and the Messers. Bell, Carmody and Craig are indeed honest citizens and to be commended for a genuine interest in the local amateur stage.

When you think upon the task they have undertaken you'll have a vague idea of the many hours they are devoting to Washington amateurs. There will be 16 half hour shows, and the critics will have to hear every one. WJSV will record each broadcast and play the records at the critic's convenience, but the fact still remains that they have to devote at least eight hours to listening, to say nothing of the time spent picking the winner.

WJSV hesitated a long time before requesting their aid, and Lloyd Dennis, the program director running this contest, was flabbergasted by the responses he got. All the boys and girls were aghast at the time they would have to sacrifice but all four accepted the jobs because they felt the local amateur theater would get a much needed lift through this competition.

Each dramatic group is in charge of its own show. WJSV experts and technicians are at hand to give any aid requested, but the clubs can put their shows on in Chinese if they feel that's what they want to do.

The amateurs have been extremely cooperative, the critics extremely charitable, and the WJSV staff deeply interested in the project, so it looks as if Washington drama lovers are in for some pleasant Saturday afternoons.

THE DRAGON'S TEETH
By ELLERY QUEEN

CHAPTER 24

"YOU EXPECT me to believe this girl here didn't know that marriage was a phony?"

"Do you think she's the kind—" began Beau; then he made a gesture of futility. "I didn't marry her on the level because I didn't want to see her lose that legacy. I didn't tell her the marriage was a fake because, if I had, she wouldn't have gone through with it. You don't know her, I tell you!"

The two assistant district attorneys whispered together. Then one of them beckoned the inspector, and the three of them whispered some more. Finally the inspector, very pale, said to Beau: "Just where did you go last night, Beau, when you left this girl in that hotel room after you'd checked in?"

Kerrie raised her head at that; her eyes looked hurt, misty, dull.

"For one thing, I'm not a skunk!" snarled Beau. "I was in a tough spot. She thought we were married, I knew we weren't . . . I made some rotten excuse, said I was coming back, and blew. When I got outside I thought of something. There were two people who had to be notified that the marriage wasn't on the up and up—they were the trustees of the Cole estate.

"I went back to my Times Square office and wrote out two letters—one to Goossens, one to De Carlos. They were identical. They said the marriage was a phony, and I was notifying them because the legal question of the passing of Kerrie's share to Margo was a factor; I didn't want Kerrie to lose even a week's income. I said Margo was after Kerrie's scalp, and I wanted them to play ball with me, stall along for awhile, until I could pin those murder attempts on Margo. Then I sealed the letters, put special delivery stamps on them and mailed them in the lobby slot. The night man in my building let me in and let me out. Then I went back to the Villanoy."

"The check-up will be made, of course." The inspector turned away, stonily.

Beau ran over to Kerrie. "Kerrie, I want you to believe me! I want you to know I love you, and that everything I've done so far was because—damn it, Kerrie, I'd cut off my right arm before I'd pull a dirty trick like that!"

The inspector and the two lawyers were conferring in whispers again. The attorneys were demanding something, and the inspector was arguing fiercely against them.

"I think I know who killed Margo," whispered Beau in Kerrie's ear. "It's just come to me—just since last night. I mean since early this morning. All I need is a little time, darling. Kerrie, say something. At least tell me you don't think I'm a murdering heel!"

She turned slowly at that, raising her eyes and fixing them on his. In their hurt, misty way, they were troubled searchlights, probing the darkness.

And suddenly she put her arms about him and pulled him down to her. He closed his eyes gratefully. He felt the straining of her arms, the beating of her heart.

A man tapped her on the shoulder, shoving Beau aside. Beau did not protest.

He watched them lead her away—to the Tombs, as he knew, to go through the whole ghastly and scarifying process of being booked, fingerprinted, locked in a cell. . . . She walked in a dream, seeing nothing.

Beau glanced at the Inspector, who waved his hand.

"Don't leave the city." Inspector Queen's voice was dry; he did not look up from his desk, where he was fussing with some papers.

"Sure, pop," said Beau gently. "And—thanks."

The Inspector started, then went back to his papers.

Beau left quickly. He knew that he would be followed. He thought it very possible, from the Inspctor's pecular expression and the glances of the two men from the district attorney's office, that before 24 hours had passed he might be lodged, with Kerrie, in the Tombs on an accomplice charge.

In fact, he was sure that only the inspector's insistence had kept the two attorneys from having him taken into custody on the spot.

BEAU walked the streets of downtown New York half the night. He analyzed his case over and over, mercilessly, picking, probing, digging for flaws. And finally, with a grunt of satisfaction, he said to himself: "It's in the groove," and sent Ellery a telegram to meet him at the office at 9 o'clock in the morning.

Then Beau went home and to sleep.

At 9 they met, and Mr. Queen's haggard appearance said that he knew of Kerrie's arrest, and moreover that he had had no sleep since learning of it.

Beau told him exactly what had happened while Ellery listened in a gloomy silence. "Well," he said at last, "we have some time—these things go slowly, and we need a complete case. Did you check up on De Carlos yesterday?"

"I found some old-timers in the Street who remembered him. They all think De Carlos was a weak sister. Big ideas, but no follow-through. With Cole dominating him from the background, planning the campaigns, De Carlos pulled the big deals in actual practice. By himself, as a planner, De Carlos was useless. As a matter of fact, he's been in the market since Cole's death—did you know that? And he's lost his shirt."

Ellery was thoughtful. "And then, too, he's been spending that million Cole left him like a gob on shore-leave. He must be pretty nearly flat, if they cleaned him in Wall Street."

"He is," said Beau.

"Any trace of his ever having been married?"

"What do you think I am, a Houdini? Far as I could check, no."

"Well, I've been doing some checking myself. For some time. There's always the possibility, but it seems fairly certain, and from the reports I've been receiving, we may assume De Carlos never married. Now, how about Cole's personal belongings?"

"Checked. Lots of duds, odds and ends of jewelry—some pretty valuable stuff, I'd say, watches, rings, studs—and a bul of personal papers. Nothi: to interest us, though."

"No, nor an automatic pencil."

"False teeth?"

"F'-."

"Eyeglasses, toupee, wig?"

"No."

Miss Penny came in with a telegram. Beau tore it open and began to jig, waving the yellow slip. "I don't know what you've got," he yelled, "but I've got plenty!"

"You can be very annoying at times," said Mr. Queen. "What is it that?"

"A wire from our man on the Coast. He's located Capt. Angus!"

"What?"

"Absolutely. And he'll be in with him tonight. That clinches it, you sockeroo! That's all I needed to clean up this case!"

"Oh," said Mr. Queen slowly. "You have a theory?"

"Theory? Nuts! I've got the answer!" And Beau began to explain, chattering like a machine-gun. Mr. Queen listened in silence, nodding glumly every once in a while. "What's the matter? You don't look very happy about it!"

"It all points that way, I confess," said Mr. Queen. "I can't disprove your theory—in fact, I can add to it and strengthen it considerably. There's only one point that bothers me, Beau."

"What's that?"

Mr. Queen waved his hand. "It's a small discrepancy—too small at the moment to worry about."

"Then the hell with it! What do you say—do we go to town?"

Mr. Queen sighed. "I suppose we may as well."

They put their heads together, going over Beau's case, checking it, reexamining, working out the details of a plan. Beau's eyes gleamed at certain contributions of Mr. Queen's, his spirits steadily rose, and he looked happy for the first time in months.

And then the telephone rang and Miss Penny said: "It's your father, Mr. Queen."

Beau sat down, losing his grin.

"Well, dad?" said Ellery.

He listened; and as he listened he stiffened. When finally he sat down the instrument he laughed aloud. "What do you know about that?"

"Know about what? Talk, you brass monkey!"

"It's the beginning of the end now, Beau." Mr. Queen rose and shook himself a little, like an athlete before running out to meet his opponent. "Dad just tipped me off. Margo Cole—hold your chair, now!—was not the daughter of Huntley and Nadine Cole. She was not Cadmus Cole's niece, or Kerrie's cousin. In fact, she was not Margo Cole."

Beau's jaw sagged. "She wasn't—Then who the devil was she?"

"One of the coolest impostors on record!"

And Mr. Queen hustled his speechless partner out of the office and downstairs, bound for a taxicab and police headquarters.

THEY TOOK a cab downtown.

"How'd pop ever dig that one up?" demanded Beau, when he had recovered from the shock.

"I didn't like her."

"Talk sense!"

"I am. I got to thinking about the woman who presented herself as Margo Cole, and there was something about her and her story that made me think in terms of flies and honey, if you know what I mean. She seemed too much the woman of the world."

"That's reasoning, all right," grunted Beau. "Lucky guess!"

"Certainly." Ellery laughed. "Except for the little detail of the 'partner' she mentioned to Kerrie just before she was murdered. A partner suggested a plot, and a plot——" He shrugged. "At any rate, I merely suggested to dad that he have the dead woman's fingerprints taken. He did, and sent photos of them by radio to Scotland Yard and the Surete. Scotland Yard came through."

"Who was she? I'm still winded!"

"A woman named Ann Bloomer, a London slum product—drunken father, sluttish mother—lived by her wits from adolescence. When she was 19 she was caught by the British police in some blackmailing scheme and sent to clink for a year. When she was released in 1925 she disappeared from England. 1925, remember, was the year the real Margo Cole's mother died in France."

"But the French police checked this woman!"

"We've all been neatly taken in. Don't you see what happened? When the Bloomer woman appeared in this country, claiming to be Margo Cole, she told a certain story. Well, that story was a consolidation of two stories. That is, she told the history of the real Margo Cole up to the year 1925; from 1925 on, the story she told was her own history. That means the real Margo disappeared in 1925—or, at least, there's no record of her existence after that year."

"You mean this business goes back that far?" Beau whistled. "Murder as far back as 1925?"

"Don't know." Mr. Queen gazed somberly out of the taxi window. "Dad's news opens up a new field of speculation and inquiry, however. Anyway, we know Ann Bloomer, who said she had changed her name from Margo Cole to Ann Strange, was actually an English adventuress with no possible relation to the Cole family. Dad checked that, too. And it's that woman who tried to murder Kerrie and was murdered herself for her pains!"

"Say, how'd she get hold of Margo Cole's proofs of identity? Do you suppose——"

"Dad's called Goossens to bring down all those proofs."

Beau told the driver to stop at the Tombs.

WHEN KERRIE saw him she gave a little cry and ran into his arms. After awhile Mr. Queen laughed. "You might introduce me to the lady, Beau."

Beau did the honors and, from the safety of his arms, Kerrie eyed Ellery in a puzzled way. "I'm terribly happy to meet the man I thought I'd married. So you're Ellery Queen!"

"And you're Kerrie Shawn."

"A little the worse for wear, I'm afraid," sighed Kerrie. "Mr. Queen, haven't we met somewhere?"

"It's one of those annoying probabilities," replied Mr. Queen quickly, "that it's so much better not to bother oneself about. Now that we meet in fact, Miss Shawn, and I've an opportunity of seeing for myself, I don't wonder you've upset Beau's whole self-centered life!"

"I'm not very much to look at these days," said Kerrie with a sad smile. "A little slap-happy from all these flattering attentions from life . . . Darling." She pressed Beau's hand.

"Look, kid." Beau was embarrassed. "I had to stop in and sort of put my arms around you again. You know. See that you weren't sore at me. But we've got to beat it."

"So soon?" Kerrie cried.

"Some day we'll knock off for a thousand years and go away together and just hold hands the whole damn time. But right now Ellery and I have work to do."

"All right, Beau." She kissed him. "That's really a nice name. Beau Rummell. Why, do you know——"

"No cracks," said Beau hastily. "Kerrie, you all right? They're treating you okay?"

"Yes, Beau."

"Anything I can get you before I leave?"

"Vi's been here. She brought me a few things she knew I'd need Beau . . . the police are watching Vi, too."

"Aw, that's just a matter of form," muttered Beau. "They wouldn't earn their pay if they didn't look smart."

"Have you—have you hired a lawyer for me yet?"

"What's the matter with me? I'm a lawyer!"

"Oh, darling, I know, but——"

Beau kissed her. "We won't need one. Ellery and I'll have this case cracked in one more day."

Kerrie's eyes grew round. "You mean you've found out——"

"Just a little more patience, funny-face. We'd try to spring you, only with that murder rap hanging over your head it's no use trying. They've got to work fast, anyway. Either release you or change the charge——" Beau's face darkened, then he grinned at her. "You'll just have to stay here a little while longer."

"Make it a very little while," Kerrie whispered.

G.O.P. Backing Raises Hopes Of Ramspeck

House to Consider Civil Service Bill Thursday and Friday

By Alfred Friendly
Post Staff Writer.

Unanticipated support from several Republican members of the House makes chances "very favorable" for passage of the Ramspeck bill to extend civil service to currently exempt Federal employes the author of the legislation said yesterday.

The bill has been placed on the House calendar for consideration Thursday and Friday. It would bring into the civil service, by noncompetitive examination, between 250,000 and 300,000 unclassified Government workers.

Representative Ramspeck (Democrat), of Georgia, said that a previously existing solid bloc of Republican opposition to his measure appeared to have been broken and that he had received assurances of some Republican support.

Democrats Switch

He said he had also heard from several Democrats, previously not "overly enthusiastic," that they would vote for the bill. The reasoning behind their switch, the chairman of the House Civil Service Committee believes, is that passage of the Hatch bill, including provisions against political activity similar to those contained in the Civil Service regulations, removed the main incentive to keep large groups of Federal employes in exempt status.

Ramspeck said many legislators told him their mail on the bill had been larger than on any other piece of legislation in many months. He said he was sure there was strong support for the measure "back home."

House a Problem

Passage of the bill in the House, the Georgian believes, will be more of a problem than approval by the Senate. The Senate, Ramspeck pointed out, already approved legislation containing similar provisions when it passed the section of the first reorganization bill concerned with civil service in 1938.

Ramspeck yesterday took pains to correct a current misapprehension about the section in his bill providing for noncompetitive examinations to bring exempt employes into civil service. Employes who fail to pass the tests, the bill specifies, must be discharged within six months after the examination date, and their positions filled by civil service employes. They may not be continued in their jobs without civil service status, Ramspeck said.

Injuries of Federal employes in the line of duty increased by more than 13 per cent in the first half of 1939 above the number in first half of the previous year, the United States Employes Compensation Commission annual report disclosed yesterday.

In the half-year period there were 19,829 nonfatal and 131 fatal injuries. During the calendar year 1938 there were 38,069 nonfatal and 302 fatal injuries.

The commission said part of the increase could be attributed to the larger number of Government employes, but "this does not furnish a complete explanation." It did not offer any further reason for the increase, however.

The Postoffice Department led all others in the increase of the number of cases reported in 1938 over 1937, followed by the Department of Agriculture, Treasury, International Boundary Commission, Justice and Commerce.

Injuries in the Navy, Interior and Labor Departments, TVA and WPA decreased.

Requests for assignment of certain amateur radio operators' "call signals" are almost as prevalent as to requests for low auto license numbers, the Federal Communications Commission reports.

In addition, the FCC has been asked no less than 400 times never again to issue the call letters of certain stations, but to preserve them in inactive status as a memorial to their deceased holders.

Although most of these requests are denied, the FCC has perpetuated the call letters W1AW for the headquarters station of the American Radio Relay League, founded by the inventor Hiram Percy Maxim, to whom the letters were originally assigned.

Besides requests for nonassignment or nonreassignment, the commission receives pleas for transfers of call signals from friend to friend, father to son, etc., and also for calls to match names, nicknames, initials or other abbreviations. One file contains some 60 pieces of correspondence with a single "ham" persistently trying to get one particular call.

In general the commission does not reassign amateur calls to others as long as the alphabet holds out and permits the creation of new calls. Under present rules a vacated call is kept unused for five years before being subject to a request from anyone but the last holder, and then it can only be requested by a previous holder.

The Washington Alumni Association of Delta Kappa Epsilon will hold its monthly luncheon at 12:30 p. m. Friday at the Army and Navy Club. Representative Hobbs, of Alabama, a member of the fraternity, will speak.

Elopers, Denied Quick Wedding At Elkton, Married in Virginia

Couple Drove 300 Miles Before Finding License and Preacher; Uncertain Whether She Will Return to Classes in High School

The availability of quick marriage in Virginia settled the dilemma of 27-year-old Harry M. Keys and 16-year-old Marguerite Morrison, Washington high school girl, Sunday night after their attempts at matrimony in Maryland failed.

Sojourning yesterday at the Hamilton Hotel, Keys and his bride said they drove 300 miles before the ceremony finally was performed at Washington, Va.

First, they went to Elkton, Md., one-time famous as a marriage-mill center, and were told that quick marriages had been outlawed. Going to Virginia, the clerk of the court at Washington was routed out, the license issued, and the clerk called a Baptist preacher who performed the ceremony.

The couple had met the night before. Keys, an employe in the District architect's office, lives at Suitland, Md., but said he and his bride, who resided at 1903 North Capitol street, would make their home in Washington. They were uncertain whether Mrs. Keys would return to her classroom at McKinley High School, where she is a junior.

Hopkins Cites Census Query Precedents

Housing Data First Asked in 1890, He Answers Sen. Tobey

Secretary of Commerce Hopkins yesterday told Senator Tobey (Republican), of New Hampshire, that the "furore" Tobey raised about inclusion of personal questions in the 1940 census was "absurd."

Hopkins implied that Tobey's criticism of the forthcoming population count, made in the Senate Thursday and repeated in a letter to Hopkins, was motivated by "purely partisan political reasons."

Tobey characterized certain questions to be asked as departures from precedent and invasions of individual privacy, mentioning particularly questions about income and mortgage data on dwellings.

Claims "Misconception"

"Your entire discussion of the census is based upon a misconception of it," Hopkins wrote Tobey.

Hopkins pointed out that the questions on mortgages were included in the census of 1890, in the Administration of Republican President Benjamin Harrison, and were repeated in 1920.

He added that Tobey might have had a much more "vivid" complaint were the census asking the value of all real estate owned by the citizen, as was done by the Whigs in the 1850 census, the Democrats in 1860 and the Republicans in 1870. The question is not being asked in 1940, Hopkins said.

Says Secrecy Is Imposed

The query on the amount of rent paid by each family, to which Tobey had taken exception, was first placed on the census list in 1930, under President Hoover, Hopkins recalled.

He said heavy penalties were involved if the enumerators revealed any information acquired while taking the census, and that there have been very few cases of violations of the secrecy rule in the history of the census.

"Can you recall any important outcry concerning misuse of census information in your entire lifetime?" Hopkins asked Tobey.
